Motorists facing blood tests

Crash drivers dodging drink charges

Attorney-General Garde Gardom has proposed mandatory blood testing of drivers injured and suspected of drinking in motor vehicle accidents.

Many impaired drivers are escaping prosecution because they are first taken to hospital for treatment of their injuries and the two-hour legal limit for taking a breathalyzer test goes by, he said.

Police and leaders of the legal profession generally welcomed this new attack on impaired driving, although a spokesman for the B.C. Civil Liberties Association opposed mandatory tests.

Gardom told a drinking driving conference in Vancouver Thursday that a recent Royal Columbian hospital study of traffic accident victims taken to hospital revealed the "surprising and alarming" fact that only one in six impaired drivers were subsequently charged.

"An injury in a traffic accident, especially a minor injury, should not be a reason for a drinking driver to escape criminal charges," said Gardom.

"I am asking officials in the ministry to look into mandatory blood testing of drivers involved in traffic accidents where the testing wouldn't interfere with medical treatment."

The attorney-general also said serious consideration is being given to lowering the impaired limit to .05 per cent.

"It's something we're contemplating proclaiming in the not too distant future."

The .05 per cent level would limit most people to only one or two drinks.

Gardom said his ministry also is reconsidering the present system of fines for impaired driving, which can be "crippling" to someone in a low income class but of little consequence to a wealthy person.

And roadside impairment checks will no longer aim at the Christmas season, but will be province-wide and year-long.

About 25 per cent of drivers in the Royal Columbian study had blood alcohol readings above .08 per cent.

It also turned up the suprising information that 37 per cent of cyclists brought in for treatment after traffic accidents had been drinking, as were 21 per cent of the pedestrians.

The proposal to change the laws will be considered by officials in the A-G's department, said Gardom, along with the the legal ramifications.

Evan Atkinson, assistant to Gardom, said the proposal involves questions of invasion of privacy and the government is going to move carefully.

"There's nothing like this in North America," he said. "We'll be going carefully."

A spokesman at the Vancouver office of the Civil Liberties Association said the board had discussed the proposal in detail previously and had decided that mandatory blood tests constituted assault.

Central Saanich Police Chief Bob Miles said that almost any method which can be used against impaired driving is worthwhile.

He said he knows of numerous occasions in Central Saanich where people involved in traffic accidents escaped charges for impaired driving because they had been taken to hospital for treatment and couldn't submit to a breathalyzer test. They refused, as is now their right, to give a blood sample.

PENNY FARTHING, velocipede, high wheel, or crazy bike — it covers a lot of ground in a hurry when 21-year-old Kent Duclos is pedalling. He was clocked at about 50 kilometres an hour today zipping towards Victoria on Pat Bay highway. Duclos got the bike five months ago and has become so adept he's planning a round-the-world jaunt in two years. He finds his present 48-inch front wheel a bit small (the rider's inseam determines the size of the bike), so he's having a velocipede built for between $1,500 and $2,000.

Jury raps MD, Glendale staff and abortion 'rubber-stamp'

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A coroner's jury today found the staff of Glendale Lodge was remiss in not detecting the pregnancy of a seriously mentally retarded woman — a patient in the home — sooner than they did.

The jury, in handing down its verdict at the conclusion of a nine-day inquest before B.C.'s chief coroner Dr. William McArthur, also said Vancouver pediatrician Dr. C. K. Chan was remiss in not familiarizing himself with the case before an operation was carried out to terminate the pregnancy.

The inquest was called to inquire into the death of an infant boy who died in Victoria General Hospital on Sept. 19, 1978, 10 hours after he was born by Caesarian section to the retarded woman. The infant was delivered in its 23rd week of gestation.

The jury said the baby died by misadventure and attributed the cause to hyalin membrane disease.

It said the baby's prematurity was a contributing factor and that the prematurity was caused by the operation, a historotomy, which in turn was caused by doctors' consideration for the mother's health.

The jury said that although the Glendale staff was remiss in not detecting the pregnancy sooner, they should be commended for their programs and patient care.

The jury noted the society operates without delegated authority or proper definitions of its responsibilities for the care of retarded persons.

The jury also found the joint Victoria General-Royal Jubilee hospitals therapeutic abortion committee has insufficient time to review applications and because of that, is "reduced to a committee that acts as a rubber stamp."

The three women and two men on the jury found that the committee has no clear guidelines to follow and fails to give consideration to the fetus in cases that come before it.

The jury found that the VGH's quality assessment committee should have been more aware of the procedures followed in the case as it was an unusual occurrence.

The jury found the hospital's intensive care unit had done eveything it could to keep the baby alive.

The jury members said that Glendale medical director Dr. John Kenneth Martin, while acting in the best interests of the pregnancy woman, failed to get sufficient independent consultation before recommending termination of pregnancy.

They noted Dr. John Dickout, Glendale staff doctor, had supported the decision and said that Dr. Michael Penn, the retarded woman's family physician, was the only doctor who thoroughly examined the woman.

The jury found that Dr. Michael Rippington, the obstetrician who performed

25 die, wide damage as typhoon rips Japan

TOKYO (AP) — The strongest typhoon to hit the main Japanese island of Honshu in 13 years has left 25 persons dead, 13 missing, more than 200 others injured and caused widespread destruction, authorities said today.

They said Thursday's typhoon ruined 44 houses, damaged 94 others and flooded more than 19,000. It also washed out 550 roads, knocked out 45 bridges and 105 dikes, and caused 587 landslides.

After cutting a trail across central and eastern Japan at about 95 kilometres an hour, the storm continued north, weathermen said. By nightfall it had barrelled past Kushiro, Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island and then roared out into the northwest Pacific Ocean.

The typhoon also caused five ships to sink in heavy seas off the coast and 50-storey buildings to sway in the capital.

Up to 20 centimetres of rain fell in Kii Peninsula, in south-central Japan.

Many office workers were sent home early in the day as the storm moved into the Tokyo area. As the afternoon rush hour approached, hundreds of commuter trains and subways remained stalled.

Gas pricing inquiry eyed?

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark would not comment today on a published report that the government is ready to begin a legal inquiry into pricing policies and competition practices of the country's four oil giants and 10 other petroleum companies.

Clark's statement follows on the heels of a U.S. government announcement that it had charged four major oil companies Thursday with pricing irregularities involving nearly $100 million following the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo.

In a copyright story today, the Toronto Star said it had learned that the justice ministry, acting on data gathered since 1973 by the combines investigation branch, is hiring lawyers to prepare the government's case.

One senior source in the consumer affairs ministry told The Star that "(the ministry of) justice is at the charging stage" in an investigation that involves everything from the price of gasoline at the pump during the last six years to prices charged to private gas companies.

He said the combines branch — now called the bureau of competition policy — has turned over "rooms full of evidence" to the justice ministry.

In Halifax, former Liberal cabinet minister Marc Lalonde said there is an indication of "implicit if not overt" price-fixing by major oil companies in evidence gathered by the federal combines authorities.

Lalonde, speaking at Dalhousie University, said that an inquiry into possible price-fixing had been in progress for several years and a report is expected by federal officials next year.

In the meantime, he told a questioner, he would comment no further upon the findings of the inquiry.

Today's Star story reported that other sources had said the investigation could easily become the largest series of court cases in Canadian history and would, for the first time, reveal how the oil giants — Imperial, Texaco, Shell and Gulf — set gas prices.

SC letter investigation expands to Vancouver

A police investigation in Victoria into a letter-forging scandal that has embarrassed the Social Credit party will be expanded as a result of information received Thursday by the attorney-general's department.

Neil McDiarmid, associate deputy attorney-general, said he will ask Vancouver city police to find out whether a letter printed last Aug. 20 in the Vancouver Sun was forged.

The letter, attacking then human rights branch director Kathleen Ruff and allegedly signed by Jane Hudson, associate professor of rehabilitation medicine at the University of B.C., led to an apology three days later after Hudson complained she was not the author.

"It looks like we'll have to investigate," McDiarmid said. "There's very little else we can do."

The decision to investigate the Hudson letter came after Victoria city police launched a probe into a forged letter sent to The Daily Colonist last March.

That letter resulted in apologies to Gordon Townsend, a well-known local NDP supporter.

The letters criticized the performance of former NDP human resources minister Norm Levi.

A team of city detectives began their investigation Thursday with a visit to the Colonist, where they interviewed editorial staff about the Townsend letter.

The controversy arose in September when it was discovered at least two Social Credit party researchers had counselled party supporters to use other people's or altered names on letters to newspaper editors.

No pipe without probe: PM

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark and Environment Minister John Fraser promised today that no West-Coast oil-transport system under Canadian jurisdiction will be approved without adequate environmental studies.

Their pledge in the Commons came a day after the National Energy Board ruled in a Vancouver hearing that TransMountain Pipe Line Ltd. does not have to provide a detailed environmental impact study on its proposal to move Alaskan oil to the U.S. Midwest.

The two ministers were replying to Jim Fulton (NDP-Skeena), who declared that proposed oil tanker traffic on the West Coast poses a major environmental hazard.

The TransMountain proposal involves shipping Alaskan oil by tanker to the state of Washington, then piping it to Edmonton into existing pipeline systems for delivery to the U.S. Midwest.

U.S. officials, however, have declared their support for the Northern Tier proposal, which would also use tankers to Washington but which would then pipe the oil through an all-American line eastward.

U.S. Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus reaffirmed today that whether the Northern Tier route was the one chosen was up to private financiers, not the U.S. government.

Andrus also said that if Northern Tier couldn't come up with financing in a year, the $600 million Canadian pipeline proposal by Trans Mountain Pipeline Co. should be given federal support.

While the Northern Tier plan would involve more tanker traffic in congested waters, Ottawa has criticized both tanker-oriented systems, endorsing instead the Foothills plan to move Alaskan oil south by pipeline, without using tankers.

Referring to U.S. government and Congress unwillingness to comply with Canadian preferences, Fulton charged "the U.S. Congress is attempting to dictate oil-transportation policy in this country."

Clark, however, rejected Fulton's call for a special study group to report on West Coast tanker traffic before President Carter's Ottawa visit next month. There would not be enought time for such an inquiry, Clark said.

Savings bond rate to 11%

OTTAWA (UPC) — Finance Minister John Crosbie announced Thursday the rate of return on new Canada Savings Bonds will increase to 11 per cent for the first year and to 10.5 per cent on the remaining six years to maturity.

He said returns on all outstanding issues will also increase to 11 per cent as of Nov. 1, and to 10.5 per cent for each remaining year.

The interest return rate for the 1979-80 series had originally been set at 10.25 per cent on Sept. 12. At the same time, the rate on five outstanding issues was set at the same rate.

Crosbie said those who have already completed applications for the new series of bonds will receive the new rate automatically. Advertising showing bond rates at the previous levels will be modified to reflect higher rates.

Under the rate increase, the return on a new $1,000 bond will be $2,023.67 at maturity in seven years.

The adjustment does not affect other terms or conditions of the 1979-80 series.

Meanwhile, credit card holders are going to be paying higher interest rates next year on late payments.

The Bank of Montreal announced Thursday that two million Canadians who hold MasterCharge credit cards will have to pay interest of 21 per cent on overdue accounts as of May 1.

The Royal Bank of Canada announced its Chargex-Visa overdue interest rates would also rise by 3 per cent to 21 per cent. The effective date is next April 1.

Both banks blamed generally higher interest rates for the move, but New Democratic Party finance critic Bob Rae called it gouging.

In Ottawa, Rae said interest-rate policy "was left on (the Conservative government's) doorstep like an abandoned baby by the Liberal Party." The baby "has now grown into a 1,300-pound sasquatch."

Rae demanded that Finance Minister John Crosbie take action on interest rates, but Crosbie told him there was no problem.

The finance minister said the banks were operating competitively and there was no evidence of "gouging."

CROSBIE
. . . long-term best

OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister John Crosbie told reporters Thursday he doesn't see much the government can do in the short-term to provide relief from rapidly rising prices.

His remarks came hours after release of September cost-of-living figures which showed the 12-month inflation rate increased last month to 9.6 per cent, its worst level since April.

He said he is not interested in fighting rising prices with short-term measures — tax cuts and give-away programs. "We've had cosmetic solutions before and they haven't worked."

The minister said he is aware consumers are suffering. He sees little hope of any letup in the burden of rising prices in the months ahead.

But the government remains convinced the only way it will win its fight against inflation is to take a long-term approach by building an economy which is less vulnerable to the decisions of Arab oil sheiks and to economic setbacks abroad.

Earlier, in the Commons, Prime Minister Clark identified inflation as "public enemy No. 1."

But, Clark, like his finance minister, rejected suggestions from various MPs that the government shield citizens from the impact of rising prices through consumer tax credits, price controls or a reversal of its tight-money policy.

The prime minister refused to re-establish the grain and wheat subsidies offered, and later cancelled, by the previous Liberal government. He also rejected an NDP proposal that the government establish a fair-prices commission to roll back unjustified price increases.

Clark told NDP leader Ed Broadbent: "We are proceeding to deal with the problem by bringing government costs under control."

He said this would lift a signficiant burden from taxpayers' shoulders and provide an example of the kind of thrift needed to strengthen the economy.

The best service the government can provide is to restore business and public confidence that the economy is under control and growing, Clark added.

Broadbent said this austerity approach could lead to a 1930s-style depression.

Earlier in an interview, the NDP financial critic Bob Rae (Broadview-Greenwood) said pensioners will have to struggle to heat their homes this winter and workers will be hard-hit by rising food and housing costs.

Liberal finance spokesmen Herb Gray (Windsor West) used the latest inflation figures to renew his attacks on the government's recent decision to raise interest rates.

Gray said the high cost of borrowing will make it more expensive to run a farm and farmers will pass along these costs through higher weekly grocery bills.

He said he has some sympathy for Crosbie trying to work out his budget at a time of rising living costs, increasing unemployment and serious economic problems around the world. But he saw no reason the finance minister should wait until November to face the music. A new budget should have been the government's first priority when Parliament opened last week, he said.

Crosbie replied that he was "very anxious to get on with his budget so the country will no longer have to live under this terrible Chretien (Liberal Jean Chretien's Nov.16, 1978) budget."

The Toronto and New York stock markets fell sharply in active mid-afternoon trading today.

The TSE 300 index was down 22.49 to 1,616.96, while New York's Dow Jones average dropped 11.85 to 818.77.

Analysts blamed fears that the Federal Reserve Board would clamp down still harder on credit for the latest New York slump.

BCRIC nets $28M earning

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Resources Investment Corp. reported Thursday consolidated net earnings of $27.9 million on total revenues of $247.5 million for the first nine months of 1979.

Share earnings for the period were 59 cents, based on a weighted average of shares outstanding, calculated on the basis of 15 million shares outstanding Jan. 1, 1979, with the balance assumed to be outstanding on the dates the company received the subscriptions, the corporation said in a news release.

In the last quarter, BCRIC had earnings of $13.6 million or 14 cents a share on revenues of $90.8 million.

President David Helliwell said forest products earnings benefited from strong lumber and pulp prices but were adversely affected by labor disruptions at Canadian Cellulose.

The company, which has 130,000 registered shareholders, was a Crown corporation with holdings in the resources field until the provincial government announced a giveaway of five shares to every eligible British Columbian earlier in the year.

Investors could also purchase additional shares at $6 until June 15. The shares were listed on the Vancouver and Toronto stock exchanges in August. In Vancouver, BCRIC shares traded at $7 1-8 Thursday.

ICBC claims up 12%

The average cost of accident claims paid by the Insurance Corp. of B.C. rose almost 12 per cent during the last six months while the cost of bodily injury claims jumped almost 16 per cent.

Corporation president Robbie Sherrell says the cost of accidents in the province is placing acute pressures on attempts to stabilize auto insurance rates in the province.

The corporation says in a news release that during the six months ending Aug. 31, the average reported claim cost $658, up almost 12 per cent from $588 during the same period last year. Bodily injury claims averaged $4,045, up from $3,490 last year.

Sherrell attributed the increases to inflation and a general increase in settlements and court awards.

The corporation reported an operating surplus of $1.7 million for the period, an improvement from the $41,000 deficit recorded at the end of the same period last year.

'Cranbrook' rerun feared

EDMONTON (UPC) — A Public Service Alliance of Canada spokesman has warned that unless there's a speedy solution to the nation-wide air radio operators strike, "another Cranbrook" is inevitable.

Ivin Pitz, union coordinator of the Northern Alberta PSAC region, said Thursday that the takeoff of a CP Air freight plane had to be aborted after taxiing onto a runway about to be used by an incoming private plane in Fort Nelson.

"It wasn't rolling any great guns but it sure had to abort the takeoff in a hurry," Pitz said, adding "There's going to be another Cranbrook if a settlement isn't reached soon."

On Feb. 11, 1978, 43 people were killed when a PWA Boeing 737 crashed while landing at Cranbrook airport in British Columbia.

Pitz was referring to confusion concerning location of service vehicles and other ground activity while aircraft are attempting to land or take off without adequate control tower guidance.

At Cranbrook, where there was no control tower, ground crews did not realize a snow plow was on the tarmac when the 737 was scheduled to land.

"I wouldn't want my family in the air during this kind of strike," Pitz said.

Pitz was concerned that airstrip lights, which are controlled by striking radio operators have been "strapped on," creating unsafe landing and takeoff situations.

In Fort McMurray and eight other Alberta airports, strip lights have remained on but, Pitz warned, without the controllers' information concerning weather conditions, using the strips is hazardous.

Ferry corp. okays pact

The B.C. Ferry Corp. ratified Thursday a two-year contract with 2,700 members of the B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union.

However, union members were refusing to take a ratification vote until the corporation reinstated a worker it says was fired for engaging in work stoppages.

Transport Minister Alex Fraser said the 24-month agreement would give union employees an annual eight-per-cent pay increase.

He said the corporation was satisfied with the new contract and hoped the union would vote on it immediately.

The union has demanded the reinstatement of a shop steward before a ratification vote is held. It has also rejected the corporation's suggestion that the issue be taken to the provincial labor relations board.

Fraser said the corporation had decided to let the board deal with the issue and a decision is expected soon.

The minister would not say if the government intends to raise ferry fares on the 26-vessel government fleet to help pay the costs of the new contract.

The last contract expired July 31 and the union conducted about five days of rotating strikes earlier this month before a tentative agreement was reached with the assistance of a government mediator.

Meanwhile, union members in Vancouver said Thursday the dismissed worker is a pawn in a tactical game of labor politics involving union executive and corporation officials.

Bob Peacock, a catering attendant at the Horseshoe Bay terminal in West Vancouver, was fired earlier this month for his involvement in at least two walkouts.

But the union's local executives, who declined to be identified, said the firing was a joint plan by company and top union officials to crack the militant base of the union at the West Vancouver and Nanaimo terminals.

They said the firing has the backing of union president Shirley Mathieson who is said to be fed up with Peacock's criticisms of union matters.

"There is no doubt about it — both the corporation and our union president would like to see Bob out," said one Horseshoe Bay ferry worker.

"He's a known rabble rouser and an outspoken advocate of workers' rights. He and Shirley don't see eye to eye."

Corporation spokesman Bill Bouchard, who said he is aware of internal attempts to oust Peacock, denied the worker was being singled out.

He was fired for previous involvement in an illegal strike and suspicions that he instigated the picket line set up last month, Bouchard said.

The issue has apparently divided the union rank and file, with some suggesting that Peacock be abandoned and the contract signed.

Other members support Peacock and claim that by withholding critical information, the union's top officers are provoking dissatisfaction among the rank and file.

"The corporation can't be blamed 100 per cent," said a local vice-president. "Peacock's complaints of union mismanagement are definitely well founded."

Peacock said in an interview he plans to fight the dismissal in court if necessary.

CNR union row blocks grain flow

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Members of the United Transportation Union voted Thursday night to continue a work-to-rule campaign that has slowed down the movement of Prairie grain to West Coast terminals.

The union members, who work for the Canadian National Railway rejected recommendations aimed at resolving a dispute over how names are arranged on a spare board which allocates extra work. The union executive and CNR officials had agreed to the recommendations at an earlier meeting.

Talks are expected to resume today, said Al Menard, a CNR spokesman.

Grain trains are being rerouted on a 300-kilometre detour over B.C. Rail tracks because a key CNR rail bridge across Vancouver's harbor is out of service after being slammed into by a Japanese freighter.

The UTU members say they don't like the spare board being used jointly by yard and train crew. The joint spare board was implemented in Prince George earlier this year to replace individual boards for the two crews.

The job action has resulted in severe delays in moving CNR trains to the BCR yard.

Firms dig dem apples!

KELOWNA (CP) — Record-breaking increases in sales by British Columbia Tree Fruits Ltd. and Sun-Rype Products Ltd. have put the two Okanagan companies' total revenue beyond $100 million for the first time.

Arnold Pedersen, president of both grower-owned companies, said today in the company's annual report that total sales for the fiscal year 1978-79 were $108 million, which places the associated companies as the 27th largest in B.C.

Total sales for B.C. Tree Fruits were $79.7 million, an increse of 16.3 per cent over the previous year, and Sun-Rype sales were $37 million, an increase of 30.3 per cent.

Auto test

Fiat, those people who provide Gilles Villeneuve with his Ferrari in Formula One, have done a complete rethink for the North American market and the result has to be one of the most completely rust-proofed cars for sale in North America.

This little devil has undercoating in places most cars don't even have paint. The car is built using a great deal of rust-proof zincrometal in critical areas; the car is then thoroughly under-coated at the factory before being shipped across the Atlantic.

When the cars arrive at Autoport they are once again undercoated by Fiat personnel. The plastic fender-liners are then installed and the car is as ready as any to face the elements.

To back it up, Fiat provides a three-year warranty against corrosion perforation, and to back up their faith in the very tough mechanical components they offer a two-year warranty against mechanical defects as well. This is the best warranty in the small car business.

So what is the car like to drive?

An absolute ball!

Typically Italian, the little wonder just begs to be driven. The 1500 cc engine is a jewel.

The engine is a very smooth little piece of work that started instantly at any temperature and idled as smoothly as anything in its class.

The Fast Lane

by Jim Kenzie

Typical of Italian design, the Fiat abounds with unusual touches. The square overall shape is relieved by a continuing round motif, that is seen in the door handles, heater controls, instruments, and even the door lock buttons. It gives the car an all-of-a-piece look, and is much more pleasant than an overabundance of straight, Teutonic lines.

. . . extensive rustproofing and improved quality control put the Strada several leagues ahead of its predecessors. The body uses Zinchrometal in all rust-prone areas, as well as PVC undercoating and plastic inner fender liners. The fit and finish impressed me as top-quality throughout.

You have an affair with a Fiat, you understand. You don't simply own it in the way you buy, drive and ultimately wave goodbye to other mass-produced automobiles.

Pure Fiat means more fun to drive. The gearshift is so light it feels as though you need only to use your little finger to progress through the five forward speeds. The brakes are a delight, sensitive and sure. The engine likes nothing better than high speed operation.

New-car smell

The car even comes with the characteristic Fiat new-car smell, a kind of essance d'gusto. But the Italian company also has broken new ground, for the Strada offers exceptional ride and quiet at touring speeds compared both to earlier Fiats and to the competition.

MOTOR TREND July 1979

by Bob Nagy

When driving cross-country, the one facet of an interior that very quickly asserts its presence is the seating. The Strada merits very high marks in this area.

What was especially noteworthy was that even at freeway speeds, the Strada, which weighed in at just under 2100 pounds, practically ignored the 30-40 mph gusts that were causing obvious problems for many other larger and heavier vehicles.

In addition to its outstanding stability, that Strada delivered a remarkably quiet ride.

DENVER, COLO. POST

by Bud Wells

A test of a sharp-looking two-door hatchback showed the Strada's best features to be good handling characteristics, especially in the snow; comfortable seating with lots of legroom and a strong-performing engine.

AUTOWEEK FEBRUARY 19, 1979

by Jim Gandy

The Strada, by contrast, feels firm, stable, and predictable. Through a judicious combination of spring rates and shock valving, Fiat has made the 2050 lb. Strada give the driver the impression of a car weighing 3000 lbs.

The impression of weight translates to an exceptionally comfortable car to drive for long stretches.

Friday, June 1, 1979—Santa Cruz Sentinel

We found the brakes to be exceptional. It was our impression that they are the best offered in this field. They are vacuum-assisted disc up front and drums in the rear.

The econobox class is probably the most competitive in today's automotive marketplace. And the Fiat Strada has much to offer any buyer. To overlook the Strada when shopping for a new car in this class would be a mistake.

ROAD TEST/Oct. '79

Begs to be driven hard on serpentine roads. Has ride that swallows dips and bumps, and "easy chair" seat and stickability rivalling some sports cars. Designed to carry 4 and does so spaciously, along with lots of luggage. Top performer of these 5 cars. It's a real "fun car." Rating: A+.

ROAD & TRACK—September 1979

The Strada amassed a whopping 11 firsts (more than any other car) in the areas of ride and handling, braking, body structure, front and rear seating, ease of folding the latter, luggage and loading, the shopping bag contest, quietness and ingress/egress.

The Strada's long suit is interior practicality, an important set of criteria for cars of this class. Comments like "Love these large, comfortable seats," speak for themselves . . . its rear seat bottom can be tipped forward to increase carrying capacity. The cargo area is tall enough, for instance, to carry full shopping bags out of sight.

Co-ordinated action needed

The frustrations that arise from the current cumbersome mechanisms of our regional district system are coming back to haunt the Capital Regional Board once again.

This time the subject is the economic development commission and at stake is the entire future of the region's co-ordinated efforts to bring new and appropriate industries to Greater Victoria.

Since it was set up, the commission has been administered by an independent commission and funded jointly by the four core municipalities and the provincial government. In recent months, however, proposals have been made to turn the whole function over to the regional district.

This makes a lot of sense. While the main commission was operating in Victoria, Sooke set up a commission of its own. Such fragmentation, if continued, would obviously be counterproductive to the region's over-all goals for economic development.

To put the commission under the regional district would also be beneficial because it would give the commission and its staff access to a great deal of material helpful to them in their discussions with business. The district has, for example, a huge computer data bank of information about the region's land, market possibilities, population, and so forth that could be made available to a regional commission.

Moreover, funding could probably be more easily guaranteed through regional management. The final proposal put forward by the regional district would see the establishment of a quasi-independent commission to take care of the economic development function, but with final responsibility to the regional board.

Regrettably, however, the component members of the board are putting the whole scheme in jeopardy. Saanich will approve the proposal only if it is made clear that the regional board will have final responsibility for economic development; Oak Bay will approve only if it is made clear the commission will be entirely separate and independent from the regional board.

The three Saanich peninsula municipalities aren't interested in participating at all. This might, of course, be a good deal for them because if enough other municipalities approve the commission, the three can have all the benefits of it without paying a cent towards the costs.

As these arguments go on, however, time is running out. Commissioner Barry Mayhew leaves his job at the end of the month. The commission really can't hire a new person until it finds out just who the new employer will be.

If some decisions aren't reached soon, Greater Victoria will find itself without an economic development commissioner while the various municipalities argue the bureaucratic details endlessly.

The other pipeline

Canada might not be excited about exporting to the United States precious reserves of liquids for heating the body from outside. But when it comes to a substance for generating the feeling of heat from within, we have few qualms.

No, it's not B.C. wine, much to the chagrin of the provincial minister of consumer and corporate affairs, Jim Nielsen. It's good old Canada beer, the malt of millions . . . hops of hundreds?

The country's three largest breweries are finding that an increasing number of discriminating American palates are acquiring a taste for their suds. It's expected that sales in the United States this year could increase as much as 44 per cent over 1978, bringing the total amount exported to 38 million gallons, or if you like, 900,000 barrels.

The Canadian connoisseur of his beer will not be surprised by the fact the products of Molsons, Labatts and Carling O'Keefe are selling in the super premium category, competing with the likes of Heineken and Michelob.

Next time you snapacapa, consider the potential of this untapped renewable resource and think how refreshing "hewers of wood and drawers of drink" sounds.

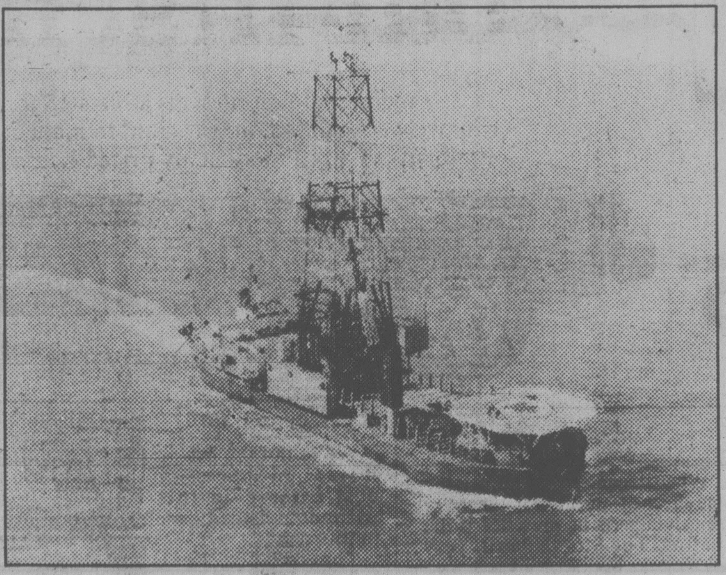
Key to a spring election

OTTAWA — A few columns back, I argued that the Clark government hasn't yet got its act properly together because it is divided, heart vs. head, between progressives (such as the MacDonalds, Flora and David) and conservatives (Sinclair Stevens, Bob de Cotret and the rest).

This gap now has widened to a chasm. If you look carefully at the reassuringly conservative facade of the Clark cabinet, you'll be able to spot, between the cracks, the furtive forms of a bunch of closet socialists.

Socialists? You may ask. Surely not? Surely not within a government that has cinched its spending belt, is selling off bits and pieces of itself to private industry, and is sending 60,000 of its own civil servants off to scramble for survival out there in The Real World?



PetroCan succeeds off Sable Island after private firms gave up

Socialist minded

Surely, yes. This week in the Commons, Prime Minister Joe Clark announced that he is "very much attracted" to a tax scheme that is the most socialist-minded of any in years, and compared to which the tax reform ideas tossed up from time to time by the New Democrats are, at best, wishy-washy social democracy, and, at worst, are cop-outs to conventional capitalist wisdom.

Here's the shower-the-poor, soak-the-rich tax scheme that Clark is about to thrust down our throats:

Next year, Ottawa will hand $100 — it's the equivalent of a so-called "tax credit" — to each Canadian, man, woman and babe. The take for a family of five will be $500. Your neighborhood unemployment insurance bum will receive the same handout as will your neighborhood corporate buff. Indeed, [illegible]ually as incomes decrease, family size increases, the poor, proportionately, will fare the best.

So much, to the ears of a conservative, for the bad news. Now for the really terrible news. The scheme will cost about $2.5 billion. As an alternative to finding the money on trees, Ottawa will have to pick it out of the pockets of taxpayers. The poor, though, pay no taxes. To cover the tab, Ottawa will have to collect the $2.5 billion from middle and upper-income taxpayers.

The devlish aspect to this socialist snare is that Clark is selling it to us coated in conservative rhetoric. His aim is to "give Canadians a stake in their own country." To do this, he proposes to "privatize" the crown corporation PetroCanada. In place of government, ordinary Canadians will jostle into the boardroom of PetroCanada, each clutching a $100 PetroCanada share given them for free by the government and which they then either can hang on to or cash in, probably at an increased value of anything up to $150.

Two explanations suggest themselves. Either Clark, once a pale Pink Tory, had turned, now that he's slipped past our guard into power, into a rampaging Red. Or, he's doing what he's doing because he hasn't got a clue what he is doing.

Between the alternatives of conspiracy and of incompetence, you'd have to plump, on the evidence, for the latter. (My analysis of the scheme's socialist character is quite correct, but quite jokey.)

Consider the general. Clark proposes to turn Canadians into owners, as shareholders, of a crown corporation, as tax-payers, they already own. The "free" shares that Canadians will receive, they will pay for as taxpayers — skipping here the detail that some will receive more and pay less while others will pay more and receive less.

Consider a specific. The most important recent commercial gas discovery was at Sable Island off Nova Scotia (three trillion cubic feet proven; a potential ten trillion). Six years ago, the lease-holder, Mobil Canada, abandoned the site. Last summer, PetroCanada bought a 25 per cent share of the centre, invested $40 million in four wells, and found the gas. Sure this is luck, except that, once "privatized", PetroCanada will be bound by the same profit-and-loss judgments as Mobil once was. (A comparable example is the as yet sub-commercial, oil find at Hibernia off Newfoundland, in which PetroCanada again is a one-quarter partner.)

True, once privatized, PetroCanada will remain as a Canadian-owned, major oil company. True, competitive enterprises often are "most efficiently handled in a private sector mode", as Clark's Task Force claimed, although shareholders of Chrysler Corporation may wonder how many exceptions it takes to disqualify the rule of private enterprise efficiency.

Cancel each other

At best, the arguments pro and con cancel each other. Why then, since PetroCanada's corporate future is marginal to our energy future, bother at all?

Here, the issue tilts at last to conspiracy. No one ever has doubted that, as a politician Clark knows exactly what he is doing. By creating an issue out of PetroCanada, Clark has created for himself his best chance to force an election next spring (when Parliament will debate the legislation), and thus to catch the Liberals off-stride before Pierre Trudeau steps down as Leader.

Give Clark an "F" for economics, but an "A" for politics.

It's no fetish

I write to express my alarm over Susan Brice's cynical statement (Oct. 10) "pupil-teacher ratio fetish." I am glad she is leaving the board to devote her time to the Oak Bay community.

As a parent and a homeowner I greatly appreciate the concern the Greater Victoria Teachers Association shows for the pupils of this district. I support a lower pupil-teacher ratio and this is why. Each and every student is a person who is a part of the future. I would like to see us, the Greater Victoria School District community, provide the best education we can for each and every student. This takes time and caring. It is this very time and caring that are affected by the pupil-teacher ratio. I am not writing just about conducting lessons to a class; I am writing about the ability of the teacher to get to know each student and be able to help each one develop his or her abilities and talents to the fullest.

Through my children's attendance at two schools in this district, I am aware of many dedicated teachers. For example, this past week I attended a parent meeting at S. J. Willis Jr. Secondary and I wish everyone in Victoria was aware of the devotion of the staff and the exciting things that are taking place at this school. — Leni Hoover, 3125 Glasgow Avenue.

Bottling botch

On September 23, on the CBC-TV program, "Marketplace," a number of incorrect assertions and false implications were made about Canadian bottlers. Since many viewers, and others, were unwarrantedly misled and disturbed, the Canadian Soft Drink Association considers it important to provide a more balanced perspective.

The first point to clarify is that bottlers are people too — with children, friends and families of our own. We are just as concerned about the safety of bottles as anyone. What is puzzling to us is the extent to which a limited number of unfortunate incidents have been magnified out of all proportion — accidents with beds, with toys, with crossing the street, with dozens of other everyday activities are far more frequent. Glass bottles by the billions have served their purpose well for many years, especially when handled with normal care.

The lack of reasonable perspective has led to immense consequences that were ignored by "Marketplace". The economic factor alone is staggering. When the federal government overreacted by banning the 1.5 litre bottle, it was not aware that it was drastically reducing $106 million in national sales of that size container, and it had no idea that it was freezing $40 million worth of these bottles and cases in the warehouses of more than 200 bottlers across Canada.

Add to this the environmental question of not being able to use cans, and the fact that each province has its own different environmental legislation, and you start to get some idea of the complications introduced by the too-hasty ban.

"Marketplace" would have you believe that the soft drink industry has been twiddling its thumbs in technical development: exactly the opposite is the case. In addition to continuing research and development by individual firms, our technical committee has been working hard on improvements and, incidentally, providing the federal government's safety protection branch with extensive and wholehearted cooperation from all quarters of the industry.

In the meantime, the government has been playing with totally irrelevant testing standards, like rolling a bottle off a table to see if it will shatter. Of course it will. That is like throwing a stone at a window to see if the glass will break, or suggesting that today's glass in fact is a miraculous, modern form of unbreakable see-through material.

It is time that our side of the story was told, and that a balanced appreciation of the matter took hold. — Tibor Gregor, Executive Director, Canadian Soft Drink Association, Toronto.

Energy policy

British Columbia's greatest asset, from the point of view of economic development, is energy — energy, the supply of which is guaranteed for many years to come.

We in B.C. have the fuel and the power. We can develop our sources and prove to the world that energy using industries have a future here. We can offer them security of supply for 20 or 30 years when other parts of the world cannot.

Oil is a problem everywhere. Another political crisis in the Middle East will leave much of the Free World's industry in chaos. But we in this province are fortunate. We can produce all of the gas and all of the electricity we want. All we need is some excess capacity in our system and we can adjust to an offshore oil crisis with comparative ease.

Potentially, we can treble our output of hydro electric power. We can replace oil with natural gas. And when these sources of energy are fully utilized, we can turn to coal (B.C.'s coal resources, incidentally, are large enough to look after our power needs and our gas needs for 100 years!).

Contrast our position with that of our good neighbours to the south. They have harnessed all their hydro. They don't have any natural gas or coal to speak of. Nuclear energy, meanwhile is hazardous and expensive so they are putting their power intensive industries on notice. They are saying that they will run intermittently, if at all, in the 1980's.

Some of these industries can come to B.C. They will come if we want them to. All we have to do is offer them a secure source of fuel and power and they will be turning our raw materials into highly processed goods before we export them to the United States and elsewhere. I am thinking, typically, of the manufacturing of refined metals, paper products, fertilizers and so on.

We need an energy policy which says, in effect, that this province is in an energy surplus position. We want certain energy using industries. We want them because it makes economic sense to process our resources before they are shipped abroad. And it's environmentally wise to do so using the latest techniques known to mankind.

I would have us move forward on two fronts — the big utility front and the smaller industry by industry front. I would have our big utilities, like B.C. Hydro and Inland Natural Gas, install new plant and equipment ahead of demand and I would allocate certain sources of energy to individual firms; companies which are prepared to upgrade our resources and give highly skilled jobs to British Columbians by so doing.

Distant sources, be they falling water, waste wood or fossil fuel, could be used locally in this way. Far flung parts of the province would get more industry. Job opportunities would be decentralized to a degree. Less energy would be wasted by moving it over power lines and pipelines to Vancouver.

Private companies should be encouraged to make their own arrangements for the production of energy, especially when this can mean the opening of new areas of the province where no manufacturing would otherwise take place.

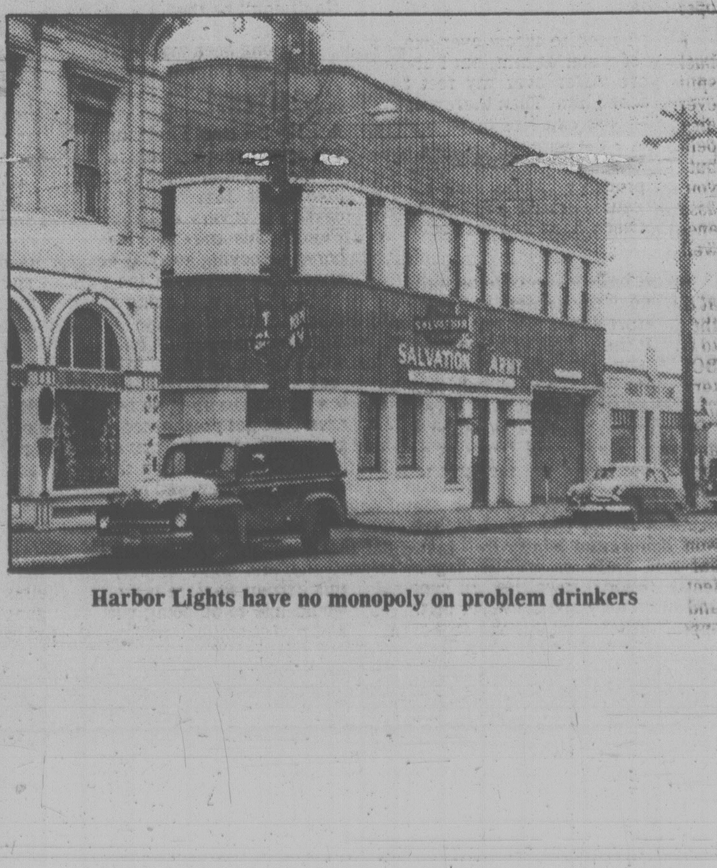
Following a two-prong approach of this kind we can't really lose. We will build up our defenses against an oil shortage and we will cease, in many years of the province, to be simply "hewers of wood and drawers of water". We will have greater security insofar as energy is concerned and we will decentralize industry in B.C. This is an energy-cum-economic development policy which should appeal to everyone.—Jack Davis, MLA, North Vancouver-Seymour.

Army defence

First, I must point out I am not a Salvationist or a reformed person from the Salvation Army's rehabilitation program. As a former employee of the Salvation Army Harbor Lights on lower Yates Street, however, I feel I must speak out in defence of the Army and of the work this organization tirelessly carries on. One has to be in its internal circle to understand the work done by these dedicated people.

One need not go in the area of the Harbor Lights to encounter people with drinking problems. The city has its share of citizens prowling around inebriated. The few that could pose a problem are nothing compared to the inebriates who stagger out of dance halls, drinking lounges and liquor licenced restaurants, creating public nuisances of themselves, not to mention the inebriates behind the wheel of a car killing and maining.

The protesting merchants are quite typical of a large portion of our society who feel they are above the few people the Army works tirelessly with to get these unfortunates back on the road to recovery. I feel sure if they weighed the situation, giving it a fair appraisal of its pros and cons, regarding the location of the Salvation Army in comparison to the existing problems, they would shed a different light on the Army's plans to work with the unfortunate individual who is weakened by liquor only to become an alcoholic, yet the Salvation Army is always there to give a helping hand. — D. James, 50 Menzies Street.



Harbor Lights have no monopoly on problem drinkers

A tragedy of blighted lives

By DAVID LAMB

NAIROBI, Kenya — The problem began when Daniel Mwangi was 6 or 7 years old — itchy eyelids, blurred vision, headaches. His father thought the boy had been cursed and took him to his friend the witch doctor.

But the witch doctor's herbs and chants did not help, and by the time Daniel was 13 he was totally blind, the victim of a virus disease known as trachoma. Daniel's father went to his grave believing that his son was paying for some evil in the family's past.

Daniel Mwangi is now 37. A telephone operator, he reads his Braille Bible daily, and he says he is not bitter. "No, not at all," he said in a recent interview. "My father was an old man who believed in traditional things. Modern medicine and Western doctors was something he could not comprehend.

"I am blind because of ignorance, but I do not blame anyone. In many ways I am lucky. I went to a school for the blind. I have a job. I have found Jesus Christ as my savior."

'Lucky one'

Mwangi indeed is among the lucky ones. For most of Africa's physically handicapped — an estimated 1.5 million of them in Kenya alone — there is no future, no work, no education and no special governmental concern. They are the forgotten people of the Third World, a huge minority enslaved by their misfortunes.

"It's an appalling problem that seems so needless in this day and age," Dr. Michael Wood, director of the East Africa Flying Doctors service, said recently.

"I don't think the developed world has any idea just how big the problems of health are here. In terms of blighted lives, it's colossal. You almost have to forget the present generation and think instead about what you can do to help the next."

This young African polio victim is getting treatment

Wood estimates that 80 per cent of Africa's handicapped would be healthy and normal today if they had had proper medical attention. But in the Third World not one person in three ever sees a modern doctor, and diseases that are all but forgotten — even unknown — in the West still cripple and kill an enormous number of Africans each year.

Hundreds of thousands have fallen victim to "river blindness" (onchocerciasis), which is spread by blackflies through nine West African countries. Polio has disabled more than half a million people in Kenya alone. Nearly 96 per cent of the world's 13 million lepers are in Africa and Asia. Measles, diarrhea and tuberculosis are commonly fatal here.

Because of poor treatment — or no treatment — accident victims remain mutilated by the uncounted thousands every month.

When Wood visited a small Tanzanian village recently, a pretty, bright-eyed, 13-year-old girl dragged herself toward him. She had suffered a compound fracture of the knee in a school-yard accident. The fracture had been treated at home and the leg was grotesquely twisted. Wood, the first doctor the girl had ever seen, asked when the accident had occurred. Seven years earlier, she said.

Old beliefs

The problem with the handicapped is greatly aggravated by the reluctance of rural Africans to accept modern medicine. Mothers will not believe that a drop of liquid on a sugar cube can prevent polio, or that clean water is related to healthy babies. If a child falls sick, it is probably because his grandfather stole a cow or his uncle wished evil on a neighbor.

As Africa became increasingly urbanized, old values began changing. Today, in the streets of cities like Nairobi, crawling beggars and wandering cripples are common. For them there is little hope of ever getting a wheelchair or a brace, much less a job other than making baskets or carving wood.

"I'm constantly facing the problem of trying to assimilate the handicapped in employment," said Moody Awori, chairman of Kenya's Association of the Physically Disabled, which was set up in 1959 to help war cripples from the Mau Mau conflict.

"But the answer from employers always is, 'We're a developing country full of healthy people who can't find work, so how do you expect us to do something about the handicapped?' I've argued time and time again that the disabled should be accepted like any other person and judged solely on their job performance, but I never get anywhere.

"It's a terrible thing to isolate these people making baskets. Some of them have very keen brains. They are as capable and as anxious to get ahead as anyone else."

A Centre for the Crippled sponsored by the Salvation Army has 270 students, but few are accepted in secondary schools, even if they get good marks in the earlier grades. Nonetheless, the centre recently sent its first graduate to the University of Nairobi.

"That's a real relief, a beginning," Headmaster Peter Nyiatu said.

Although the handicapped are usually neglected, several African countries — among them Kenya, Ghana and Nigeria — are taking admirable steps to deal with their integration into society, and almost every country now places a high priority on basic health needs.

Nigeria is building 285 health clinics and increasing its health expenditure over a five-year period from $350 million to $2 billion. Mozambique has inoculated more than half its 12 million people against smallpox and measles. Liberia has piped drinking water in six cities and has 10 hospitals and 220 clinics operating throughout the country. Kenya is spending $1 million on special education this year and President Daniel Arap Moi has declared 1980 the Year of the Handicapped.

Zachary Onyonka, Kenya's minister of housing and social services, concedes that the government's expenditures are still negligible, but says the handicapped are "not a problem for government alone but of the whole society. We must change our attitudes towards the disabled."

Last July the first blind Kenya attorney, Stephen Julius Karioko, was admitted to the bar after attending the University of Nairobi's law school. He spent two months working in the attorney general's office and recently returned to his home in Embu, 100 miles northeast of Nairobi, hoping to set up his own practice.

"It was a long and arduous struggle," he said, "but when you are the first to come out of the tunnel, you definitely expect many others will follow, and perhaps do better than you."

STRAY FEATHERS

Harold Hosford

There was a touch of spring in the air and I wasn't the only one who thought so. A band of House Finches were doing a pretty good imitation of how a band of House Finches would act if it was spring. But it wasn't spring; it was the middle of October.

What had brought on these thoughts of spring, for me at any rate, was the bright warm weather and the songs of those finches. They'd settled on the chain-link fence near the terminal at the airport and half of them — the reddish-colored half — were singing as if it was March.

Now it's a well-known fact that birds are not supposed to sing in the fall; spring is supposed to be the season for birds to sing. But House Finches, and some other birds as we shall see, are noted for their disregard of this the first rule of bird song. While they don't sing as much in the fall, they're not above a bar or two whenever the feeling moves them at any time of the year. Their song in fall may lack some of the liquid exuberance of spring, but it's still a pretty good imitation of the real thing.

Most people who give consideration to such things agree that the role of song in the life of a bird is mostly advertisement, to give notice of an occupied territory, or enticement to some passing female to enter a short-term agreement on family matters.

And there's no doubt these are the principal reasons why birds sing. After all, don't most of them stop singing — or at least reduce their efforts considerably — once a mate has been found, or once the nesting season is over?

On the other hand, there's enough song going on outside the nesting season to give good grounds to the belief that birds sometimes sing just for the sheer joy of it. And that's what I think my little band of finches was up to — they'd felt the touch of spring just as I had. They were reacting to the beautiful day just as I was. They were just feeling good!

But I've heard enough birds singing outside the nesting season, and in some pretty unspring-like weather, to feel that there's more to fall and winter singing than just feeling good.

Take the two Song Sparrows I saw down on McMicking Point last November. It was a dull, windless, misty morning — certainly not the kind of weather to raise the spirits. Yet there they were, each stationed on the tip of a gorse bush, about 25 feet from each other.

And they were singing, not in their full voices of spring but in a kind of sotto voce, softly, almost as if each was singing to itself.

But I got the feeling they weren't singing to themselves; they were singing to each other. They never sang together. One would sing and the other would answer. They were so intent on their little duet they paid little attention to me as I walked along the path between them.

In searching about for reasons why these two Song Sparrows were behaving this way, I came right up against why most birds sing in the spring — to announce territorial rights. And Song Sparrows — at least in this part of the world — retain, or re-establish, territories through the winter. While these winter territories are not defended with the same intensity that they would be if they were nesting territories, my two little males on McMicking Point obviously thought a song was needed to settle a boundary dispute that had arisen.

Another songster noted for forgetting the season is my old friend Bewick's Wren. Given a calm warm day from late January on, you can expect an explosive outpouring from any nearby Bewick's Wren. And it'll be for the same reason as the Song Sparrows — the wrens are on their territories all winter too, and I guess they figure a little announcement to that effect now and then helps to keep out the riff-raff.

Then too there's Bewick's tiny cousin — the Winter Wren. This little tike isn't above several bars of its remarkable song — at any time of the year and in almost any weather. The Winter Wren, too, keeps a winter territory and could be said to sing at that time of year for the same reason as its cousin, but I can't help wondering if birds sing a lot more because they enjoy it — than we're prepared to believe.

Now that's chutzpah!

VICTORIA (CP) — B.C. will try for a toehold in the California wine market, said Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Jim Nielsen. He said no B.C. wines are sold there and he would like to know why.

You've got to admire the man's spirit. Is Economic Development Minister Don Phillips trying to sell B.C. coal in Newcastle? Is Energy minister Jim Hewitt shipping B.C. oil to the Middle East? Grace McCarthy exporting smiles to Tahiti?

When it comes to selling B.C. wine, we need a man who has no preconceptions about the product and won't take no for an answer. Either that, or somebody prepared to grab the money and run. As for breaking into the California market — well, the sheer audacity of the idea (not to mention the wine) is enough to take one's breath away.

We wish Mr. Nielsen the best of luck in the land where Robert Louis Stevenson once declared that the local vintage was "bottled poetry." B.C. wine ought at least to be able to produce a competitive limerick.

The problem with pets

Katharine Whitehorn

LONDON — I came home the other day to find my son trying to blow up a balloon with his nose. "It's easier," he insisted between gasps. My first thought was that I'd ignored a birthday or forgotten I was giving a kids' party; but no. The balloons, as I might have guessed, were just the latest gimmick in the Great War of the Cats.

They have built new apartment blocks near us, you see, and a fresh influx of muscular tomcats is busy staking out our territories between them. When one of these villains actually clawed our cat's stomach open, the family decided this was War; and we are now mounting our defences with all the seriousness of a military operation.

First I used to throw over-excited buckets of water at him, but I always spilt more water over my feet than ever reached him. Then there was the airgun — you can fire quite a lot of pellets at a cat without harming him, but the snag is he got used to it — and you're probably giving him a good assault course training in the difference between hard and soft cover as well.

So the balloons were to be stationed at the end of the garden, and next time the creature appeared they were going to fire at the balloons, which would go BOOM! and cause the animal to flee in terror. Maybe. I couldn't help thinking of the advertisement for a rat gun "Guaranteed to kill a rat at 50 yards and give it an awful fright at a hundred," but I kept my thoughts to myself.

All this activity, though, had me wondering again what we all get out of our pets. Here we are, leading a perfectly rational town life, all concrete and electricity and conveyor belts and supermarkets, and our one urge seems to be to have small tigers going round disrupting the house and the neighbourhood. Why? For company? Well, yes, but we have too much company and we still have cats. Because taking them for walks gives us Healthy Exercise, say the dog-owners — but then they groan loudly every time they actually have to do so. Besides, whoever had to exercise a guinea pig? No, it can't be that.

It's long been my belief that people really keep animals as a substitute for the wilder instincts they have to suppress in themselves. You see some mousey little man barking orders at a dog he can scarcely control as it snarls at the neighbors; probably he'd just love to do that himself, if only he dared. Or a very elegant lady letting Fido off his little red leash and elaborately looking away as he deposits a huge smelly mess at the curb — she wouldn't dream of doing anything like that herself, of course . . . or would she? Dream, I mean? I always used to wonder, too, about my in-laws' beagle; they were so decorous themselves that it was hard to imagine how their children ever got propagated, but the beagle would strop its private parts relentlessly up and down the leg of any visiting stranger, and never really got quite the rebuke you'd expect.

I would love to do nothing all day, so my cats do it for me; and plainly this garden warfare is what my fellas would like to be doing with real guns and real enemies. And I'm told that in mechanized cavalry regiments, they all have great glossy dogs — as horse substitutes.

Dorothy Parker, the American writer, once found two alligators in her taxi "where someone had been prudent enough to abandon them" and put them in the bath: whereat the house-cleaner left, saying she couldn't work where there were alligators. Wouldn't Dorothy Parker, savage wit, omnivorous devourer of men, have just loved to crunch the odd leg between her huge, toothy jaws? There is, in fact, a New York legend that people have been flushing baby alligators down their plumbing for years, and that these have grown up and now stalk the sewers. Down there somewhere in the dark, our animal instincts are prowling — whih is exactly what animals are for.

I'm still puzzled about my friend's tortoise, though. He has his address painted on his shell, because when he stalks off and turns up in other people's gardens they wouldn't otherwise know where to return him — the local theory is that he's in love with a tin can down at No. 48. Does the tortoise express Mike's subsconscious desire to tiptoe quietly away to another garden — or Pat's desire to have her husband firmly labelled with his owner's name, and brought back struggling to the door by the little girls he has tried to befriend? Somehow, I don't think I shall manage to ask them.

Unions, boss unite to fight alcoholism

VANCOUVER (CP) — Problem drinkers will cost British Columbia employers about $220 million this year and unions and management are co-operating to fight the common enemy.

The fight has spawned employee assistance programs — voluntary, confidential programs designed to help workers with alcoholism and other problems.

Studies show the average problem drinker is between 35 and 55 and is married with two or three children. An alcoholic employee can be anyone from a top executive to a janitor.

Businessmen with alcoholic workers once thought they had two choices — tolerate the drinkers and risk poor production and low morale among other staff or fire them and spend valuable time and money finding replacements.

This harsh choice has led to another alternative with the emergence of both public and privately-run employee assistance programs. Companies are treating alcoholism as a disease and finding it makes economic sense to rehabilitate alcoholic workers.

The programs began originally to help alcoholics but they have branched into other employee problems — drugs, marital, parental, legal and financial — that could affect work performance.

"The key to the (programs) is to have an independent service that will assess the alcoholic's problem and figure out the proper treatment," says Kent Pearson of the provincial alcohol and drug commission's professional development division.

The division advises companies how to set up their own programs but its involvement does not end there.

It also funds Interlock, a non-profit organization started several years ago by volunteers representing labor, management and assistance program co-ordinators.

Assistance programs also train supervisors, shop stewards, fellow employees and families to recognize when an individual is in trouble and to convince him to seek help.

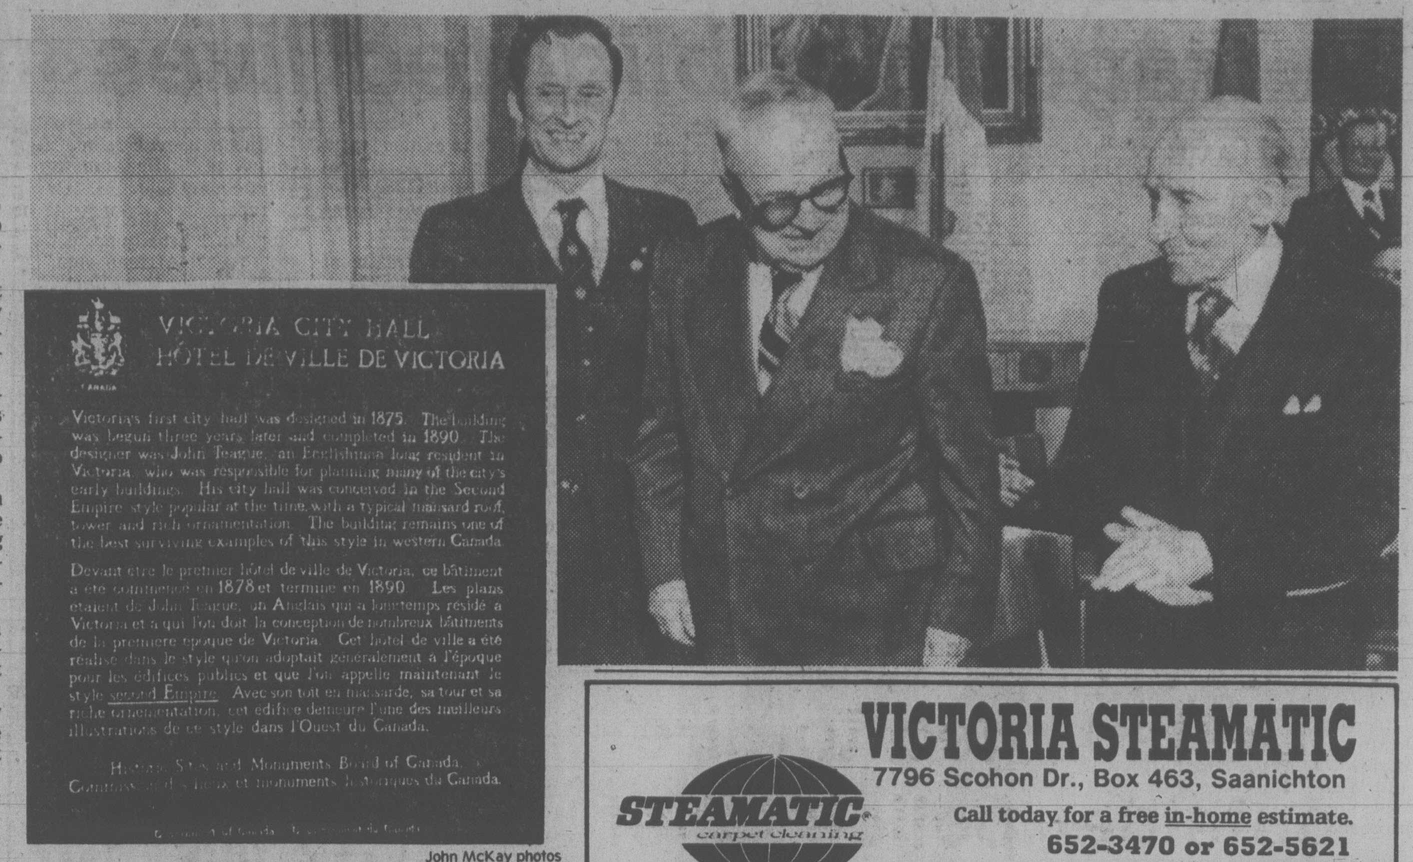
"What we have tried to do is build up an atmosphere of relative trust so that people will let us know when someone is going haywire," says Jack McNeil, employee assistance co-ordinator for Canadian National Railways and Interlock president.

Part of the approach is to precipitate a crisis for the alcoholic employee by confronting him with his problem before it becomes chronic or fatal.

"It's called tough love," says Garry Sim of Interlock. "It's confronting the alcoholics and telling them they aren't doing themselves any good."

Interlock director Joan Lynch says the agency is attracting 3.5 per cent of employees to its 11 programs. About half the problems are for emotional, marriage and family stress while about 28 per cent involve alcohol and drugs.

Of those referred by management because of poor work, about 75 per cent are either in the same job, have been transferred, or promoted, says Ms. Lynch. More than 50 per cent say their situation improved because of the program.



VICTORIA CITY HALL
HÔTEL DE VILLE DE VICTORIA

Victoria's first city hall was designed in 1875. The building was begun three years later and completed in 1890. The designer was John Teague, an Englishman long resident in Victoria, who was responsible for planning many of the city's early buildings. His city hall was conceived in the Second Empire style popular at the time, with a typical mansard roof, tower and rich ornamentation. The building remains one of the best surviving examples of this style in western Canada.

Devant être le premier hôtel de ville de Victoria, ce bâtiment a été commencé en 1878 et terminé en 1890. Les plans étaient de John Teague, un Anglais qui a longtemps résidé à Victoria et à qui l'on doit la conception de nombreux bâtiments de la première époque de Victoria. Cet hôtel de ville a été réalisé dans le style qu'on adoptait généralement à l'époque pour les édifices publics et que l'on appelle maintenant le style second Empire. Avec son toit en mansarde, sa tour et sa riche ornementation, cet édifice demeure l'une des meilleurs illustrations de ce style dans l'Ouest du Canada.

McGeer again 'unfair'

Education Minister Pat McGeer is in hot water with the B.C. Government Employees Union for the second time in two months.

The union filed an unfair labor practice complaint with the Labor Relations Board Thursday over McGeer's recent memo to college principals.

The memo instructed them to estimate the cost of staff time devoted to negotiation and maintenance of contracts, as well as the cost of administrative time to handle union grievances.

The memo is an example of McGeer's opposition to the collective bargaining process and is an attempt at intimidation, union general secretary John Fryer said in a news release.

"McGeer has in the past clearly stated his opposition to the collective bargaining process within the educational system," he said.

"This opposition was demonstrated by his actions at Notre Dame University and, more recently, by his attack on the collective bargaining process at Pacific Vocational Institute."

The earlier complaint against McGeer was filed after the union said he tried to discourage Notre Dame faculty members from forming a union.

The BCGEU represents employees at eight colleges and vocational institutes in the province.

Grape growers hit hard

KELOWNA (CP) — Severe cold last winter has resulted in a loss of about $1.5 million, says Gary Tayler, of Penticton, president of the British Columbia Grape Growers Association.

Tayler said in an interview Wednesday the loss is difficult to assess but about 500 acres of vines were lost and he estimated the replacement cost would be about $3,000 an acre.

However, he said government assistance to growers who suffered losses will soon put the industry back on its feet. About 800 acres of new vineyards have been planted and another 700 acres are being considered for grape growing.

Prospective prospectors study rocks for possible mineral content

Gleam of gold fills class

VANCOUVER (CP) — Enrolment at the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines Prospecting and Mining School, which seems to be tied to the rise and fall of the market, is on the upswing again.

In the middle 1950s, when uranium made the pulse of prospectors quicken, the school attracted about 400 students.

Enrolment later fell off, but now with the price of gold passing the $400 mark, and prices of silver, copper and molybdenum also on the increase, the school is enjoying a boom as big as the metals.

About 200 prospective prospectors have been crowding into a high school cafeteria this month to take in classes. Taught by a series of guest lecturers and assisted by University of B.C. geology students, the group is given a primer in everything from how to stake a claim to bush survival.

"This is the biggest class we've had in the last three years," said Sanford Woodside, assistant manager to the chamber of mines. "The rise in gold has made a difference, though this is a prospector's course, not a course in placer mining."

Graduates have found, among others, the Eldorado uranium mine in Saskatchewan, the Northair gold and silver mine at Alta Lake, north of Squamish, and the Cassiar asbestos mine.

"The price of gold has something to do with it, but most of the people who take this course spend quite a bit of time in the outdoors . . . (they see something and want to know what it is," said Woodside.

"Some take it to actually get into prospecting, some are prospectors taking a refresher course, but most just do it for curiosity's sake."

"I hike and ski a lot and I'm curious about what I see out there," said student Mary Roberts. "I'm not looking for the world's biggest gold nugget."

Delta urged to hire outsider police chief

DELTA (CP) — Police here should give serious consideration to hiring their next chief from outside the existing force, a British Columbia Police Commission investigation has recommended.

The investigation, under provincial judge Roy McQueen, was completed and filed with Attorney-General Garde Gardom this week.

Some details were released Thursday by Mayor Ernie Burnett, but both he and Gardom have said full copies of the investigation will not be released.

Burnett said the report deals in generalities rather than specifics on management concerns that could be improved in future.

A parallel investigation into the affairs of suspended police chief Merv Smith — who is eligible for retirement at the end of this year — was continuing, Burnett said.

Burnett confirmed the report remarks on hiring a police chief from outside the force.

He also said the investigators found that some of the complaints should be thrown out, that some were handled properly and others should be investigated further.

The commission investigation was announced July 4 by Gardom following complaints about individual acts of a small number of policemen on the Vancouver suburb's force.

Smith was suspended Sept. 27 as a result of information turned up by the investigation. RCMP are continuing an investigation into Smith's affairs. Ken Brown, New Westminster police chief, has replaced Smith on an interim basis.

Placer pickets spread

VANCOUVER (CP) — Striking workers at Placer Development Ltd.'s Endako molybdenum mine near Fraser Lake have won the right to picket a construction site at another Placer operation after the provincial labor relations board reversed an earlier decision.

The board said Thursday it had acted on erroneous information about a contractor when it banned pickets from Placer's Equity Silver mine near Houston until Dec. 31.

Under the board's new ruling, members of the Canadian Association of Industrial, Mechanical and Allied Workers will be permitted to set up picket lines at the construction site as of Oct. 31.

The previous board report, written after Commonwealth Construction Ltd. had appealed a board decision permitting the pickets, said the construction company had fixed costs of $150,000 a day.

New York

A new selloff sent stock prices into a broad decline today amid fears that the Federal Reserve Board would clamp down still harder on credit.

The 2 p.m. Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 11.35 at 818.77.

Late Thursday the Federal Reserve Board reported an unexpectedly large $2.8 billion jump in the basic measure of the money supply for the week ended Oct. 10.

Midway through that week, the Federal Reserve announced that it would seek to restrain inflation by direct measures to curb the expansion of the money supply.

Even though it was too early to expect to see results from the new strategy, the statistics released Thursday came as a disappointment to many observers.

London

The London stock market fell moderately near the close of trading today.

The Financial Times index was down 1.6 to 468.5.

Industrials declined but oils and banks advanced.

Canadian shares eased.

This monthly increase translates to 10.8 annually, considerably above the recent nine per cent average. Company reports

CanCel

Canadian Cellulose Ltd. has reported earnings of $3.8 million or 31 cents a share for the nine months ended Sept. 30, compared with earnings of $494,000 or four cents a share in the corresponding period last year.

Net sales were $61 million compared with $39.9 million in the first nine months of 1978.

Donald Watson, president and chief executive officer, said firm demand and higher prices for kraft pulp and continuing strong lumber markets offset the impact of union strikes totalling 34 days at the company's Prince Rupert, B.C., pulp operations.

He said coast production has been curtailed to compensate the reduction in demand. Export plywood markets remain satisfactory, he said, but face increasing competition from U.S. producers.

Offshore lumber markets maintained their strength during the quarter, the company said. However, further reduction in lumber prices in the U.S. are expected for the balance of the year as recession and high interest help lower the amount of new housing activity.

Crown Z

Citing strong export demand for its pulp and paper products and newsprint, Crown Zellerbach Canada has reported a 57-per-cent increase in profits for the first nine months of 1979.

The company says in a news release that its net earnings for the period increased to $40.8 million or $4.95 a share from $25.9 million or $3.17 a share during the same period last year.

Sales rose 23 per cent to $457 million from $371 million during the first nine months of 1978.

Net earnings in the third quarter were $14 million or $1.70 a share from $9.3 million or $1.14 in last year's third quarter.

Kaiser

Kaiser Resources has announced consolidated net earnings of $48,477,000 or $1.80 a share for the first nine months of 1979, a three-per-cent increase over earnings of $46,880,000 or $1.75 a share for the corresponding period last year.

The resources company also announced it is spending $23 million to purchase a 6.3-per-cent working interest in the Brae oil field in the British sector of the North Sea from Ashland Oil Inc. of Kentucky.

The acquisition increases Kaiser's interest in the field to 7.7 per cent.

Weldwood

Weldwood of Canada Ltd., has announced net earnings of $32.5 million or $6.61 a share for the nine months ended Sept. 30, compared to $21 million or $4.28 a share for the corresponding period in 1978.

The company, in a prepared statement, said net sales in the third quarter were $136.8 million compared with $122.1 million the year before,

Tom Buell, president and chief executive officer, said plywood markets in Canada eroded during the quarter and predicted little improvement through the remainder of the year.

Cominco

Cominco Ltd. has reported that unaudited consolidated net earnings for the nine months ended Sept. 30 were $135.5 million or $7.63 a share on sales of $898.2 million.

This compares with consolidated net earnings of $35.6 million or $1.83 a share on sales of $644.4 million for the same period last year.

The improvement in metal markets generally, and particularly gold, silver and lead, which started last year continued during the third quarter and was the most significant factor contributing to increased earnings Cominco said in a news release. The devalued Canadian dollar also contributed to earnings.

Scott Paper

Scott Paper Ltd. has reported a 42 per cent increase in net earnings totalling $4.4 million for the nine months ending Sept. 30, compared to $3.1 million in the corresponding period last year.

The company, in a prepared statement, said the net income per share was $1.81 up 39 per cent from the $1.30 in the same period in 1978. A dividend of 17.5 cents per share was declared payable to shareholders on Oct. 31, bringing total dividends per share to 47.5 cents for the nine months, compared to 35 cents in 1978.

George O'Leary, president and chief executive officer, said net sales showed a 21 per cent increase when it rose to more than $1 million this year compared to $87,000 last year.

Yorkshire

Yorkshire Trust Co. has reported net income for the year ended June 30, 1979 was $1,537,920 or $6.39 a share, compared with $1,174,778 or $4.88 a share the previous year.

The Vancouver-based trust company said revenue was $20.8 million compared with $15.7 million last year.

Company president Gerald McGavin said the firm's strong financial position and policy of matching assets and liabilities should enable it to maintain its profitability and growth in the current fiscal year.

Futures in future

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto Stock Exchange has announced it has tentative plans to introduce a futures market for bonds and other financial issues by the first half of next year.

The exchange said in a release that establishment of the futures market, which was proposed earlier this year, will depend upon approval by the Ontario Securities Commission and might be delayed because of demands placed on the exchange's computer system.

Plans call for initial trading in futures contracts for Canadian treasury bills and federal government bonds.

Mac-Blo buys Abitibi plants

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel, Canada's largest forest products company, said Wednesday it has reached agreement in principle with Abitibi-Price Inc. to purchase three of its plants in Ontario.

The British Columbia company said the Abitibi-Price holdings are corrugated container plants in Pembroke and Rexdale and a mill at Sturgeon Falls which produces hardboard siding. The sale is subject to approval by both boards of directors.

The price was not disclosed.

Calvert Knudsen, MacMillan Bloedel president, said the company has been trying for some time to enter the packaging business in Eastern Canada.

MacMillan Bloedel is engaged in a five-year, $1.5-billion capital expenditure program to expand its facilities.

Brascan picks up Noranda shares

TORONTO (UPC) — Brascan Ltd has purchased about 10 per cent interest in Noranda Mines through a private agreement with Labrador Mining and Exploration Co. Ltd, Brascan president J. Trevor Eyton has announced.

Brascan, which was taken over by Edper Equities after losing a bitter corporate battle for control of F.W. Woolworth Co. this year, paid $168.7million for a block of 7,850,490 common Noranda shares at $21.50 (Canadian).

A company spokesman said the investment represented about 9 or 10 per cent interest in Noranda.

Brascan was taken over in June by Edper Equities, two-thirds owned by Edper Investments Ltd., a holding company owned by Peter and Edward Bronfman, after a bitter three month corporate battle.

Clark takes hard line on oil

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark said today he hopes to reach agreement with the provinces on higher prices for oil but if an accord is not reached soon "we'll take the decision ourselves."

Clark said at his weekly news conference that the country has to face up to the tough decisions needed to promote more exploration, conservation and replacement of oil by other energy sources.

"A country like ours, to be strong in the future is going to have to face some difficult decisions in the short term," Clark said.

"There's nothing to be gained by backing away from tough decisions."

Clark's statement echoed a comment earlier this week by Finance Minister John Crosbie and appeared to indicate a hardening of the federal position in the protracted discussions with the provinces over oil price increases.

Crosbie said Wednesday: "I think it's a good time to face up to the energy price question and get it behind us and get down to the job of getting the country moving again."

Clark said today "the time to consult has not ended." But he hoped to have an energy package put together before the federal-provincial first ministers' conference on the economy in early December.

"This government wants an agreement but if necessary we'll take the decision ourselves," Clark said.

Meanwhile, in Edmonton, The Journal says Alberta is prepared to ease its demands for higher oil prices if the federal government agrees to curb its urge to spend the province's resource wealth.

The newspaper said today that Premier Peter Lougheed is ready to keep Canadian oil prices at a lower level than the world price in return for the federal concession.

Alberta will proceed with previously-discussed natural gas price discounts if Ottawa reciprocates by backing away from plans to dictate how the province should spend money in the Alberta Heritage Savings Trust Fund, the story said.

The province is prepared to peg the price of Canadian domestic oil at a certain percentage of the international level, the report said.

Alberta Energy Minister Merv Leitch and his federal counterpart, Ray Hnatyshyn, discussed energy pricing at a private meeting in Ottawa Wednesday.

Leitch refused to comment on the meeting, saying only that more meetings likely will be held.

When asked about reports the government wants an increase in the federal excise tax on gasoline that would raise the price to $1.30 a gallon, Clark replied that there are a variety of options being considered.

Little would be gained by Ontario Premier William Davis' request to put off any decision on price increases until after the December economic conference, Clark said. The conference might only be turned into one more forum for opposition to price increases.

Clark was pressed on the point Thursday in the Commons. But he sought to play down Davis' opposition to price increases and would only say talks are continuing.

Bennett blames oil ills on federal subsidies

Premier Bill Bennett said Thursday Canada's current economic ills can be blamed on the fact the country dragged its feet instead of facing realistic oil price increases five years ago.

Ottawa is eyeing a 30-cent-per-gallon federal excise tax on gasoline which would be over and above the proposed five or six annual $4 per barrel increases in the wellhead price of domestic oil.

Bennett Thursday was philosophical when asked if he felt the increases, which could see gasoline hit $1.30 a gallon within a year, was the right move for Canada.

"I just got back from Japan, where the price is $2.50 a gallon," he said.

"Others returning from European countries say gas is $3.50 a gallon."

Bennett said there were only two economies — the U.S. and Canada — which subsidized world oil price increases instead of trying to adjust domestic prices during the upward surge in 1973 and 1974.

Those countries are now suffering because of their failure to face it, he said.

CUPW pickets Parliament

OTTAWA (CP) — About 75 postal workers demonstrated briefly on Parliament Hill today to show they haven't forgotten how Parliament legislated them back to work exactly one year ago.

Singing "Solidarity forever . . . the union makes us strong" and shouting "hands off J. C. (Union leader Jean-Claude Parrot)," the workers marched in a tight circle at the entrance to the Parliament buildings for about half an hour.

In a speech to the demonstrators, Andre Beauchamp, first national vice-president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, said "last Oct. 19 was not only a black day for Canadian labor, it was, in many ways, a very very proud day."

"It was a day when 23,000 workers said: 'No, we're not going to take it.'"

The union had been without a contract since June 30, 1977, when it called members out on a legal strike Oct. 16 of that year.

When Parliament intervened three days later, union members said it was robbing them of their right to negotiate and strike and they did not return to work until Parrot ordered an end to the strike Oct. 25.

Lockout hits Quadra

The Canadian Coast Guard weathership Quadra sailed for for weather station Papa almost two hours late this morning and minus three radio operators because of a management lockout, according to a Public Service Alliance of Canada spokesman.

As a result no weather information will be transmitted from the Quadra during the seven weeks she is on station, said John Hart, PSAC regional representative for Vancouver Island.

Three non-designated radio operators were not on board when the vessel sailed. The Quadra usually carries seven operators.

Hart said Jim Bayliss, Vancouver Island telecommunications area manager, forced the lockout situation when he demanded the operators sign a statement saying they will perform all normal duties while at sea.

"He knows we are in a strike situation," said Hart. "We are treating that as a lockout.

The three non-designated operators refused to sign the statement and left the ship, Hart said.

Earlier this week the PSAC accused the federal government of illegally locking out radio operators across the country and posing a threat to the safety of the travelling public.

The statement, which said the alliance is filing charges with the public service staff relations board, came on the first day of a strike by 1,167 operators, members of the Union of Canadian Transport Employees.

Today's incident with the Quadra is an attempt by management to make the union look bad, Hart said.

Tillicum deal approved

Cal Investments, a West Vancouver development firm, will start work soon on a major shopping complex on the Tillicum outdoor theatre site.

The company edges out Broadmead Farms Ltd. in the Saanich shopping centre race.

Broadmead, in partnership with The Bay, wants to build a large shopping centre but is still in the planning stage.

The 295,000 square foot Tillicum centre was approved after a long struggle between the Capital Region District and Saanich and will cover 30 acres.

Broadmead's orgininal proposal for a similar-sized centre on a 35 acre site east of the Pat Bay Highway between Royal Oak Drive and Royal Oak Avenue is being revised and won't come before council again until early next year.

Both companies had been racing to finish first and capture the market, but Broadmead fell behind and will have to face the CRD, which opposes another major shopping complex in Saanich.

According to Cal Investments vice-president James Briggs, construction of the Tillicum centre will cost between $15 and $18 million.

Competition dims outlook for west's coal

By TOM KENNEDY
Christian Science Monitor

BANFF — Suddenly, there seems to be a great deal of trouble looming for the western Canadian coal industry.

Alberta, in particular, could face a most serious challenge in developing export and domestic markets during the 1980s.

The recent Canadian Conference on Coal has concluded that export prospects that only a few years ago appeared rosy now look rather bleak.

There is a lot of coal around, it seems, and all the major producers are determined to stake their respective claims to the available market. The markets, in turn, are not expanding as fast as once predicted because of the general sluggishness of the world economy.

Canada will be lucky to obtain about three percent of the world's coal trade by the year 2000, even though it does have the potential to produce almost twice as much for overseas customers. But the worst news by far concerned the domestic market.

On the strength of earlier enthusiastic projections of rapidly rising coal demand, especially in Ontario, a series of vast coal mines were to be developed throughout the two westernmost provinces.

The bulk of Canada's 29 billion tons of proved and "recognized" coal reserves happen to be buried in almost equal quantities on either side of the continental divide astride the Rocky Mountains.

However, the brave western Canadian dream of supplying growing volumes of both thermal and metallurgical coal to Ontario suddenly has been shattered. Ontario, the single largest domestic coal market, will continue to rely on United States imports.

In fact, Ontario has served notice that it will not be taking much more than the token supplies of coal now bought from Alberta for thermal power generation. By the same token, any additional coking coal for steelmaking likely will come from Cape Breton, Nova Scotia.

Ontario Energy Minister Robert Welch said a continued emphasis on nuclear power generation and other considerations of the provincial energy policy left no room for appreciable volumes of additional western Canadian coal.

The utility firm Ontario Hydro, and three Ontario steelmakers have been regarded by government and mining industry planners here as leading purchasers of Alberta coal beginning in the next decade.

The projected vast Ontario demand for thermal and metallurgical coal in effect would have underwritten the planned series of new mines in the west along with expanded rail transportation facilities to the lakeheads.

Apparently, the transportation penalty — about $20 a ton — inherent in the long distance movement of coal proved too much to bear. The minister has denied that Ontario is using western coal purchases as a retaliatory measure for Alberta's firm grip on domestic crude oil and wellhead pricing.

"We always try to buy Canadian, but there is an (economic) limit to doing so," Welch said.

Ontario Hydro is a leading customer of U.S. coal producers, and the three steelmakers also have a direct ownership stake in mines in West Virginia and other Appalachian coal fields.

One of North America's largest public utilities, Ontario Hydro does not contemplate any change in its commitment to the nuclear option. It has three operational nuclear power plants. Another plant is under construction.

Ontario in 1977 surpassed Japan as the largest importer of U.S. coal. It continues to hold that position, Welch noted.

Ontario steelmakers in 1978 used about 7.2 million tons of metallurgical coal, almost exclusively supplied by U.S. mines.

Western Canadian coal producers had hoped to obtain a sizable portion of Ontario's thermal but especially metallurgical coal market mainly because the United States was believed to be opposed to continued high-level exports of its only remaining abundant energy source.

However, coal exports "do not appear to be a contentious issue in the U.S. at this time," according to Ontario's point of view.

In fact, U.S. coal producers are stepping up the export drive in their traditional markets abroad including Ontario.

Nanaimo architect awarded

Nanaimo architect David Spearing was honored Thursday with the first lieutenant-governor's medal awarded by Heritage Canada for his work on Victoria's Centennial Square and Gastown in Vancouver.

He was praised by the conservation foundation also for innovative ideas in preserving the Strathcona area of Vancouver's east end, adjacent to Chinatown, and as founding member of Nanaimo's heritage advisory committee.

"Through his efforts with this committee, he has continually heightened the awareness of the city council, the advisory planning commission and the public at large in the potential of their heritage as an enriching force in their daily lives," said Heritage Canada, which is here for its annual meeting.

Another Vancouver Islander, "Nanaimo whirling dervish" Elizabeth Low, received a communications award for the various slide shows, displays, essay contests, walking tours and exhibits she has organized to promote interest in Nanaimo's past.

Also honored among the 25 awards presented at a special dinner at Government House by Lt.-Gov. Henry Bell Irving were Angus Apartments and Hy's of Canada for the restoration of sugar baron B.T. Roger's mansion in Vancouver's west end.

Harbourside Joint Venture of Vancouver got an honorable mention award for renovations to an old Hudson's Bay Co. warehouse in Gastown while the Queen Charlotte Islands Museum Society took a community service award for what Heritage Canada described as impressive efforts to repatriate Haida artifacts to the islands.

Nazi files returning

WEST BERLIN (Reuter) — The U.S. Document Centre in West Berlin, containing 100-million pages of former German Nazi party files, will be handed over to West Germany by 1981 at the earliest, a city parliament spokesman said recently. Hermann Meyn said West German authorities had reached agreement after 12 years of negotiations with the United States, whose forces confiscated the files after the Allied capture of Berlin in 1945.

McDermott rejects CUPE stand

McDermott: 'artificial nightmares'

QUEBEC (CP) — Dennis McDermott, head of the powerful Canadian Labor Congress, said Thursday he plans to do nothing to mend fences with a giant union demanding his resignation.

McDermott said he will not resign, has allies in the labor movement who will back his leadership and finds the complaints against him nonsense, false, "artificial nightmares."

The Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) has voted more than 1,000 to one to seek McDermott's resignation on grounds he has failed to rise to the defence of postal workers.

Today, postal union leader Jean-Claude Parrot gave his endorsement to the CUPE stand.

Parrot won a long standing ovation from some 1,500 delegates to the national convention of the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE) after a speech which he ended by saying: "We have to make the decisions of today the reality of tomorrow."

CUPE says the postal workers are the chief targets of government persecution of all public service employees. By not getting tough on behalf of the postal workers, CUPE says McDermott has betrayed all public sector workers and the entire labor movement.

"What do I have to do? Jump through hoops?" McDermott said in a telephone interview from Ottawa. "The whole exercise is pointless. It's an emotional binge."

CUPE, with more than 257,000 members, is the largest affiliate in the labor congress, an umbrella organization for 2.3 million union members across the country.

The postal workers belong to another union, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, which is also a labor congress affiliate. It has about 23,000 members.

Postal union leader Jean-Claude Parrot was freed from jail to speak today to some 1,500 delegates at CUPE's week-long national policy convention where the vote to dump McDermott took place.

Parrot was sentenced last spring to three months in jail and 18 months probation for a conviction of defying Parliament's bill last fall ordering legally-striking postal workers back to work.

He was freed on bail last spring pending an appeal hearing by the Ontario Supreme Court. The decision is still pending.

Three teens plunge to deaths

JORDAN, Ont. (CP) — Three Hamilton teenagers were killed and a fourth was critically injured Thursday night after falling about 30 metres on to rocks in a gorge at a conservation area.

Niagara Regional Police identified the dead as Michael Slyka, 17, Emile Jerman, 16, and Peter Shkimba, 17. Police said Robert Peters, 17, also of Hamilton, was in critical condition in the Hotel Dieu Hospital in St. Catharines.

Inspector Mel Friesen of Niagara Regional Police said six teenagers arrived near the Balls Falls gorge at about 9 p.m. EDT and set a camp fire. The youths fled when they were approached by a conservation officer and a police officer, who had been summoned by the conservation officer.

Friesen said the four victims ran off the brink of the gorge and fell to the rocks below. The other two hid in nearby bushes until the two officers arrived.

The conservation officer said he saw the confusion of the youths as they fled.

"They ran along the edge of the gorge a short distance — maybe 20 or 30 feet — and then it seems they got mixed up in their directions and took a left off into the gorge," he said.

"In the dark, my goodness, they just didn't have a chance. Probably it's a miracle we didn't have all six down there."

Firefighters scaled the steep rocky cliffs to remove the bodies on stretchers tied to a rope.

Friesen said he did not believe that drugs or alcohol were involved inthe incident. He beleved that the teenagers were not familiar with the terrain near the gorge.

Police have questioned the two uninjured teenagers.

Dr. David Lorenzen, St. Catharines' coroner, said post-mortems will be held today to determine the cause of the deaths. He said it appeared that one of the dead suffered a head injury, one had a broken neck and one may have drowned.

He pronounced the three dead at the scene at about 11:30 p.m. Thursday.

Jordan is 25 kilometres west of St. Catharines.

Court appoints Abacus trustee

CALGARY (CP) — Justice Hugh J. MacDonald of the Court of Queens Bench agreed Thursday to sign an order appointing a special trustee to act on behalf of client-developers of the financially-troubled Abacus Cities Ltd.

The client-developers made application for the trustee after Thorne Riddell, put in charge of the company's affairs after the Bank of Montreal sought a court order, recently concluded he could not properly represent client-developers as well as act in the best interest of other creditors.

Mr. Justice MacDonald was also told there is a threat of foreclosure on properties in Alberta and British Columbia worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

The properties were left in various stages of completion last May when the company was forced into receivership.

The client-developers, nearly 5,000 individuals who invested in tax shelters with Abacus, recently agreed to a proposal to keep the company alive rather than force bankruptcy.

The court was also told the Alberta Securities Commission is conducting an investigation into share transactions of Abacus and its satellite companies.

That investigation is expected to last several months.

He ignored Bronx cheer from cronies

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Three career options were open to Vincent Bufano as a youth growing up in the south Bronx a few years ago — crook, cop or construction worker, or so he says.

Bufano, 22, and a muscular, 6-foot-2 first generation Italian-American, opted for construction worker and now finds himself a movie-TV star. He has the physique of an Adonis, the nose of a prizefighter and the eyes of a poet.

Viewers will see the kid from the Bronx in the movie Gorp, due out this fall.

A tough, street-wise kid, Bufano grew up in a rough and ready Italian-Jewish neighborhood where you survived on your reputation as a street fighter.

Bufano established his prowess with his fists early in life and discovered once he proved he could handle his dukes he rarely was challenged.

His nose has been broken three times and he's lost several teeth. But the real challenge was breaking away from the traditional routes open to youngsters growing up on the streets of New York. He brings to mind a real life Rocky Balboa.

"Either you became a crook or a cop, it seems," he said. "A lot of my friends are New York cops right now. And some of them are behind bars.

"If you were lucky, you followed your father or your uncle into a union and became a teamster or a construction worker. My father died when I was a little kid so I was raised by my mother and grandfather.

"I also had seven uncles who lived on the same side of the street in the neighborhood. My best friends were 14 cousins who lived in the same block.

"I knew all the cops in the area. And, when I got in trouble, they never ran me in. They did worse. They took me home to my mother. Then my uncles took turns coming over to beat me up. I learned the hard way."

Bufano's nickname was "dreamer." His dream was to become an actor. He came out of theatres imitating Robert Mitchum and Marlon Brando. He acted in plays at St. Michael's High School.

Tough guys in the neighborhood ridiculed his acting aspirations, but not too strongly. Bufano played fullback on a neighborhood sandlot team and fought in the heavyweight division of the Golden Gloves, effective deterrents to his detractors.

"No other actors ever came out of the neighborhood," said Bufano. "I didn't want to settle into the rut that the other guys did.

"I'd see guys in their 30s and 40s who grew up in the neighborhood, hanging around on street corners at night, working 9-to-5 jobs during the day.

"There was no such thing as a career. I knew a 9-to-5 job wasn't for me when I was a meat slicer in an Italian delicatessen. The boss caught me rapping with the girls and told me I'd wind up being a bum.

"Maybe he was right. But I worked steadily from the time I was 13, all through high school. I loaded crates of fish at the Fulton Fish market and I lugged sides of beef at a packing plant. I also did heavy labor in construction, breaking up sidewalks with a pick.

"Between times I took acting classes and dreamed of becoming an actor."

After leaving high school, Bufano sold his car and his other possessions, withdrew his savings from the bank and headed for Hollywood.

He spent his first seven months in the film capital trying to locate Frank Campana, a friend of his grandfather with show business connections. Campana put him in touch with an agent.

"I lived in a rathole of an apartment and spent most of my money on acting classes," Bufano said. "I honestly went hungry for weeks at a time. My weight dropped from 230 to 180 pounds.

"I was used to eating those wonderful big Italian dinners mother used to fix every night. But I didn't give up my dream.

"My agent got me my first job, playing a tough guy in Flatbush, a TV series that bombed. The important thing was it got me a Screen Actors Guild card. They paid me $500 a week. I didn't know there was that much money in the world.

"Then I did a few guest shots and got a good part in Gorp. Now . . . I'm making a lot more money."

Backers of movie run cold

MONTREAL (CP) — Production of The Incredible Mrs. Chadwick, a $6.6-million Canadian movie starring Shirley MacLaine, has been postponed indefinitely because of financing problems.

Montreal producer Harry Gulkin said interim financing for the movie fell through "for reasons quite beyond our control" and there was no way he could proceed with the movie.

Filming had not begun, but a cast of 10 lead actors — including Miss MacLaine, Gordon Pinsent, Richard Widmark and Rita Tushingham — had been signed or committed and their contracts will have to be negotiated, Gulkin said.

During the summer, Miss MacLaine had put classifed advertisements in Montreal newspapers asking to rent a home in Westmount so she could jog on the mountain.

Based on a true-story account of a Canadian-born con woman, The Incredible Mrs. Chadwick was to be shot in Montreal and directed by Danny Mann, director of Come Back Little Sheba and Butterfield 8.

Gulkin said the interim financing of $4.1-milion collapsed when the Merchant Trust Company of Toronto demanded a contract making the film's producers liable for the full amount of the loan.

Gulkin said he was willing to sign the contract but Denis Heroux and John Kemeny of International Cinema Corp., with whom Gulkin was co-producing the movie, were unwilling to sign.

CLUES ACROSS

6. INSOLENTLY not indolently. "Asking for trouble" implies doing something positively to offend, e.g., by INSOLENT behavior in a given situation. Also, it would be a question of working (rather than "acting") indolently.
7. WOULD not could. The temptation to delay payment would relate to the creditor's preparedness (rather than ability) to wait for his money.
9. PINS not pans or pens. The clue suits things for which one may often "find" various more or less inventive uses. Pans and pens, however, have distinct and understood purposes.
12. LOSS not lots. LOSS of stakes certainly goes on constantly, as suggested. On the other hand, "lots" can be taken to indicate unusually active play or high stakes.
19. BIAS not bids. The clue has the air of referring to something unwelcome, such as BIAS, or unfavorable prejudice. Also, for bids, refuse would have been nearer the mark than the clue's word "ignored."
20. PROTECTION not projection. Flak was essentially regarded as some sort of PROTECTION (perhaps not great) against air attack. Although missiles were projected skyward, one doubts if many people thought of anti-aircraft fire in terms of projection.
22. THRONG not throne. THRONG is more firmly apt, since "royalty" in a broad sense (as distinct from the monarch) doesn't have a throne. In any case, a throne is comparatively rarely involved, but a THRONG is readily envisaged on such public occasions.

CLUES DOWN

1. RIGOROUS not vigorous. Probably most people would find a vigorous life agreeable, if they had the time and the energy, etc.; but principally a hardy type would be suited to a RIGOROUS life.
2. HOLD not cold. The clue's mention of transit hints at HOLD (of a ship). Also, since the cold is itself preservative in effect, the clue's approach ("There are means . . .") is somewhat inapt.
4. STOP not step. It is reasonable to think of a journey in terms of STOPS, but one attaches no specific significance to "the last step" of a journey on foot.
5. LYING not dying. Since dying is, in itself, the saddest thing possible, the clue's last seven words have more point for LYING.
10. GUYS not guns. It's a question of shooting incidents of some kind, rather than of "guns getting fired" as if this were something that might happen to the guns themselves and be worth recording.
11. FOOT not boot. One FOOT can be seen as like a reflection of the other whether or not boots are worn.
13. BRAIN not train. The clue has a critical air, as if being "slow" and "empty" are allied conditions — which they are in the case of BRAIN. There is no apt relationship in the fact that a slow train (like a fast one!) may be rather empty.
14. CRUSHED not brushed. "When" they're packed they may be CRUSHED; but, more strictly, before they are packed they may be brushed.
15. APPLE not ample. APPLE is a perfectly good fruit filling, of course; but in certain cases (eg., when making pies economically for commercial purposes) ample or over-generous filling may not be entirely appropriate.
16. SHOUT not shoot. On the basis of long familiarity with the person's voice, the neighbor might claim to have heard that person SHOUT. Nobody can claim to hear who it is that shoots.

Canada hard on software?

CALGARY (CP) — The $2.7-billion computer software industry in Canada may disappear by the mid-1980s unless the federal government allows major tax incentives, John Kelly, Systemhouse Ltd. vice-president, said Wednesday.

Kelly told the Western Computer Conference it's incredible that Canadian investors will put more than $100 million into movies during 1979 because of tax concessions, yet there isn't any tax incentive for high technology industry.

The movie Meatballs, as an exported commodity, certainly achieves more notoriety than an automated cartography system and has more appeal with the voter and thus the politician, Kelly said.

Yet the stakes are much higher if the software industry is expected to be $35 million by 1987 in the United States and more than $6 billion in Canada, he said.

"But unless we encourage major investment in developing software equipment with tax incentives, the Canadian software people will end up as distributors for the major U.S. companies.

"We need at least $100 million in investment within the next couple of years to stay in the running. U.S. domination of the hardware computer manufacturing, the actual computers, implies subsequent domination of software or program manufacturing. Canada's only potential for competiveness rests in specialization."

The Canadian industry must plan and invest to be dominant in the 1980s.

Rental housing outlook gloomy

EDMONTON (CP) — The outlook for construction of rental housing in Canada in 1980 is gloomy, says a Toronto-based consulting firm.

Clayton Research Associates Ltd. says a decline in rental housing starts is anticipated because tax write-off legislation for individuals investing in new rental housing is expected to expire at the end of 1979 and because high interest rates and the proposed mortgage interest and property tax credit is encouraging renters to buy.

Clayton says a reluctance by consumers and builders to buy or build single-family homes because of current high interest rates will be offset by the federal tax-credit plan.

Epp defends Yukon self-government plan

OTTAWA (CP) — Northern Affairs Minister Jake Epp said Thursday colonialism within Canada's border is over and the Yukon should be allowed more self-government.

Epp was defending in the Commons his actions to move the territory closer to provincial status after Ian Watson (L—Chateauguay) questioned the legality of some of the changes Epp initiated last week.

The Yukon has been provided with responsible government as far as the Yukon Act will allow, he said.

There would be no further moves toward provincial status until there had been full consultation with the territory's elected assembly and Indians.

"We believe the people of northern Canada should enjoy the same rights as we do in the south," he said.

"The period of colonialism is over."

Last week, Epp announced the federal government had decided to curb the powers of the Yukon commissioner and remove that federal appointee from day-to-day decision-making.

Commissioner Iona Christensen, appointed last January by the former Liberal government, resigned within hours of the announcement.

She said the government was moving too quickly towards provincial status.

Embassy move costly - Stanfield

OTTAWA (UPC) — Canada could lose more trade with Arab nations if Prime Minister Joe Clark goes ahead with his plan to move the Canadian embassy in Israel to Jerusalem, Ambassador-at-large Robert Stanfield says.

"I think that all the Arab countries in the Middle East will make it clear to anybody that their attitude toward Canada would be affected by a move of the embassy, and no doubt that some might translate this into their trade policy," Stanfield said on his return from his Middle East fact-finding mission.

He added it was no secret that some countries in the Middle East tied economic policies to foreign policies.

"Canada's announcement in respect to the embassy is of concern and a bit of a mystification in those countries," Stanfield told reporters at Ottawa International Airport.

The federal government confirmed earlier this week that Canada had lost $4.6 million in contracts with Arab countries after the prime minister stated last June he intended to fulfil an election campaign promise and transfer the embassy from Tel Aviv.

Asked if he had found room for compromise with the Arabs, Stanfield said only that he would report his findings first to the prime minister.

"I couldn't honestly say that they were full of enthusiasm at the prospect, but certainly Canada stands high in the respect of all those countries," Stanfield said, cautioning that Clark's statement had not been regarded by the Arab governments "as a friendly act."

The ambassador explained his mission to the Middle East was two-fold — first to determine Arab reaction to Clark's stated goal, and secondly to "ameliorate relations between Canada and the Arab states."

He said he would not return to the Middle East before completing his report, but did intend to include in it results of a visit to several North African countries in late November. The report is expected to be made public early in the new year.

He also said he would not have any further discussions with representatives of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, saying he felt he "had a pretty good picture of their point of view."

"I think I've had as much contact with supporters of the PLO as I need for the time being," he said.

CMHC next on Tory hit list, Grits say

OTTAWA (CP) — Liberal housing critic Lloyd Axworthy said Thursday he fears a major federal withdrawal from the housing field at a time when housing and mortgage markets are in disarray.

Axworthy (Winnipeg-Fort Garry) told a news conference he understands the government is being advised by a special study group to dismantle the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp.

The study group was created last summer and was headed by Don Matthews of London, Ont., former head of the Progressive Conservative Party.

The group includes representations of several federal departments and agencies and an advisory group of experts in the housing field.

Axworthy said he understands the group will recommend that the federal housing agency give up its program of mortgage insurance to private mortgage lenders.

In effect, he said, the agency would lose the profitable side of its activities and remain saddled with the major expenditures involved in other housing programs.

A spokesman for Elmer MacKay, minister in charge of CMHC, said later Thursday that the Matthews report has not yet been received by the government.

He said he expects the report in the near future and it may be made public early next month.

The spokesman also said the cabinet will have to decide whether or not to accept th group's recommendations.

Axworthy said a strong federal presence in housing is vital now because of the weakness of the industry.

Housing starts have fallen off because of rising interest rates, and mortgage rates in excess of 14 per cent mean some home-owners refinancing their mortgages are facing default.

Earlier Thursday in the Commons, Don Blenkarn (PC—Mississauga South) expressed concern about "an enormous number" of repossessions by CMHC involving condominium townhouses.

MacKay said CMHC plans to be more cautious about insuring mortgages for townhouses.

A CMHC spokesman said later there are no statistics available to indicate special problems facing owners of townhouses.

Treu review slated

OTTAWA (CP) — Former chief justice Lucien Tremblay of the Quebec Court of Appeal is to review the case of Peter Treu and make recommendations on his claim for compensation, Justice Minister Jacques Flynn announced today.

Senator Flynn said in a press release that because of "the extraordinary circumstances surrounding this case" he had decided to seek the advice of persons outside the justice department.

The extraordinary circumstances the minister listed as "the fact that the charges were laid under the Official Secrets Act, that the department of justice was so closely involved in the actual prosecution; and that the trial was held in camera."

He is seeking $150,000 damages against the government.

Glendale staff criticized the operation had been persuaded by others to terminate the pregnancy in the interests of the mother only.

They said Dr. Chan should have tried to get more information on the case before the operation but noted he had tried conscientiously to keep the baby alive.

They noted Chan did not report the death to the coroner at the time.

The jury said Dr. David Lintern, chairman of the therapeutic abortion committee "missed an opportunity to cause the committee to look at this unusual situation."

"In view of the uniqueness of this case and lack of precedents, there was insufficient time to explore alternatives," the jury found.

The jury said there was no consideration given to the fetus or the fact that if the operation had been put off even two or three weeks the infant's chances of survival would have increased.

"This is our most important finding," the jury said.

The jury made a number of recommendations.

They felt the attorney-general with the assistance of the ministries of human resources and health should develop legislation and guidelines to protect the rights and interests of patients such as those in Glendale.

They recommended the Glendale administration to keep a closer watch over charts of its patients.

The jury urged several changes to the therapeutic abortion committee and suggested the committee should only review cases where the gestational age is between 17 to 30 weeks.

Decisions for aborting fetuses of an earlier age should be left to the patient, her physician and a consultant.

They also felt abortions in such cases should be removed from the Criminal Code requirements and made that recommendation to both the attorney-general and solicitor-general.

They recommended increasing the committee membership from three to five including two non-medical persons, and establishing a referral list of experts to whom committee members could refer for advice.

They also felt the provincial public health service should establish an abortion counselling service.

Injured drivers face blood test is always for the person. The charge is incidental."

David Wilson, past president of the Victoria Bar Association, said mandatory blood tests would certainly be an effective way of getting impaired drivers.

"If smeone is really drunk and driving and you believe those people should be caught, then you've got to support it. I can't see anything wrong with it."

The seven-month study, first of its kind in North America, according to the attorney-general, was carried out at the Royal Columbian between November, 1978 and May this year. It involved 776 victims of traffic crashes — drivers, passengers, cyclists and pedestrians.

Of the total, 31 per cent had been drinking and 25 per cent had exceeded the legal .08 limit.

Half the accidents were between 4 p.m. Friday and 4 a.m. Sunday and these accounted for 64 per cent of the over-.08 blood alcohol readings.

The age of the injured victims tended to decrease as the lateness of the night increased.

Marijuana was tested for but was detected in only nine cases during the study, and five were drivers of whom two had also been drinking.

Only 20 per cent of women drivers and passengers had been drinking, but of the men studied 51 per cent of the passengers had been drinking compared to 34.5 per cent of the male drivers.

The report on the Royal Columbian study was prepared by Russ Rockerbie, research director of the CounterAttack program.

Liberals continued their week-long attack on Prime Minister Clark's oil diplomacy.

"We're going to push this issue as far as we can," John Munro (L-Hamilton East) told the Commons.

As in previous question periods, Munro charged that the Clark government did not firmly tell the U.S. government of Canadian opposition to the proposed oil tanker traffic and support for Foothills. Foothills recently suspended its plan in the face of stated U.S. preference for Northern Tier.

Munro, a former cabinet minister, specifically attacked the Conservatives for not having cabinet ministers make representations to the United States on the issue.

Clark, who Thursday listed many meetings this summer on the issue between Canadian and U.S. officials, rejected the suggestion that the presence of ministers at such meetings is necessary to make Ottawa's views clear.

"In this government the officials, including the ambassador to the United States, speak on the instructions of ministers."

Clark also complained that it is far easier to make his government's views known to U.S. officials than to make a simple message clear to the Opposition member.

After question period, Munro attempted to raise a question of privilege, accusing Clark of misleading the Commons about cabinet ministers' activities to support the Foothills plan.

But Speaker James Jerome refused to accept the question of privilege, terming it more of a complaint about the quality of answers than a valid question of privilege.

Charges coming on gas?

spokesman for Imperial Oil Ltd., said his company was aware an inquiry had been conducted but did not know the reason behind it.

He said several company executives were subpoenaed by the federal government to testify before the restrictive trades division in 1975.

Imperial gave the government everything it wanted, he said. The company also was aware that an inquiry into pricing policies was conducted recently in the Peterborough, Ont. area, but did not know for what purpose.

Robert Vallance, a Gulf Canada spokesman, said his company was "aware of a long-standing federal investigation. But how it snowballed into this is a mystery."

Imperial had after-tax profits in 1978 of $75 million while Gulf Canada netted $29.9 million. Shell Canada's earnings were $151.4 million in 1978 while Texaco had net income of $148 million.

The U.S. government said today its largest claim of $67.9 million was against Atlantic Richfield Co. The other companies were Exxon USA, Conoco and Amoco.

Most of the irregularities involved the companies allegedly inflating costs, the U.S. energy department said. Department officials said it was not certain how much of the inflated costs might have been passed on to the consumer in the form of higher prices.

The department statement said none of the allegations "involve . . . willful wrongdoing" and representatives from two of the companies — Exxon and Conoco — denied any improper actions.

TOWN TALK

Hancock House, the publishing firm founded in Victoria eight years ago, has moved to Vancouver.

David Hancock said the move was "a tumultuous experience" but now editorial offices and warehouse and living quarters are all in the same spot.

For years, Hancock House's warehouse was in Vancouver and the editorial office and his home were in an old coffee shop on Island View Beach — rather isolated from the mainstream.

The new offices are still on the water, however. Hancock lives and works in a houseboat moored on the North Vancouver side of Burrard Inlet, almost directly beneath the Second Narrows bridge, so close to it, in fact, he was the one who first called police when that Japanese freighter slammed into the CNR rail bridge a few dozen metres east of his houseboat

The rearrangement of the Finnerty Road entrance to the University of Victoria has so enraged some faculty and students that the perpetrators are being proposed for the Donatien Alphonse Francois prize for traffic management and campus beautification.

He's better known as the Marquis de Sade.

English professor Herbert Smith says that what was a difficult intersection before has been made even worse.

"The change produced other important advantages as well: more weedy lawn was covered with asphalt, some noisy skylarks were displaced, a lot of money that might have been spent foolishly on books for the library or reduced tuition to students was converted to capital improvement."

Hungarians who fled their country during the October, 1956, uprising will attend a commemorative meeting at Windsor Park Auditorium Saturday at 7 p.m.

The Canadian-Hungarian Society of Victoria will also hold a wreath-laying ceremony at the Cenotaph in honor of those who died in the fighting.

Good deed award goes to the students at Lester B. Pearson College of the Pacific who decided they wanted a change of pace and organized a massive litter pickup in Langford, Colwood and Metchosin.

More than 220 students and members of the teaching staff combed the roadsides, parking lots and shopping plazas in the district, filling a total of 1,000 plastic bags.

The pickup was the brainchild of Swedish student Johan Ashuvud and the Capital Regional District provided the bags.

Harknett, 59, started in his father's coal and wood store in 1936 and continued there until 1951, when he shifted to oil and has been an oil distributor ever since.

"I may go back into business later but I'm looking forward to a bit of a break after 43 years of working. I think I'll take at least six months off."

First retirement activity will be co-ordinating the Sandown racing season for the Capital City Turf Club.

Public transit has a language all its own, says Commuta, the newsletter of the Urban Transit Authority.

The government agency which supervises B.C. buses has announced plans to standardize transit information province-wide, everything from symbols to timetables, maps and bus stop signs.

"Ideally, a person should be able to step off a bus from Nelson and understand transit information in Vancouver. In other words — it will be the same bus language all over British Columbia."

Vancouver International Airport was just a crawlin' Thursday night with media types.

There were television, newspaper and radio reporters all buzzing around looking for this lady flying in from Europe.

Was she a movie star? A famous authoress? A prominent lady politician?

Nope — she was Ellen McKay whose name has cropped up almost daily in the Lettergate stories.

The big fuss was all for nought. The reporters found to their chagrin that McKay had quietly landed in Seattle.

After the shakeup, new vitality

'We like to know the kids'

By JANE COVERNTON

Keeping the kids off the street was the way it started.

In the 1860s in New England that was all the philanthropists wanted to do when they set aside some rooms and started the Boys' Club.

Today the Boys and Girls Club of Greater Victoria is a little more ambitious.

One of their key words is leadership and young people from seven to 17 learn about leadership in a number of ways.

Director Stan Warlow says kids from all over Greater Victoria will participate in programs this fall, many of them in areas where there are no other recreational programs.

About 20 per cent of them come from single-parent families. Many could not afford similar programs at the Y or recreation centres. Membership fee is only $5.

Most of the programs are organized around volunteers with specific skills. They are loosely structured and offer longer hours than most recreation centres.

"The thing is to develop a very personal close organization, all on a first-name basis. The activities are not the end in themselves. We like to know more about the kids," says Warlow.

The club is one of 23 agencies seeking your donation through the United Way campaign.

Jason Merriman and famous friend on Ottawa visit

This year the club is slated to receive $75,470. That covers about 75 per cent of the club finances.

That financing is not an automatic gravy train. The club went through a thorough shake-up this year because of the United Way's insistence that it meet certain standards.

This year up to 600 young people will participate in club programs. Before the United Way instigated the review, there were a lot fewer using the programs.

Now the United Way is confident the club is worthy of public support.

As Jason Merriman says: "They get the kids to do something with themselves instead of just hanging around."

When John Diefenbaker died, 15-year-old Jason was upset.

He had met the former prime minister last spring — thanks to the club — and was impressed with the Chief.

He had the feeling he had met someone important and succumbed to Dief's directness.

The trip to Ottawa to be in a pageant for the International Year of the Child was the high point of Jason's four years with the club. But along the way he's had lots of opportunity to learn about leadership in a more practical way.

Now Jason thinks he'd like to work with kids when he gets older.

"They're just another friend, no great higher authority," says Jason.

Another 15-year-old learned something about leadership on the summer program.

Things were rough — his family was breaking up and he and his brother were placed in different foster homes.

He decided to take off in a car even though he had no driver's licence. He was going for good — he said.

But after a weekend, he came back because he had a commitment to his work as a volunteer leader.

And for yet another 15-year-old, the summer program meant not only learning about leadership but meeting new friends in a strange town.

Jane Mason says the hardest time for her was when the bus broke down on the Malahat and she was left alone to amuse 30 restless kids while someone else went for gas.

"I never thought I could manage so many," she says.

Jane and her 13-year-old brother James were new to Victoria. Instead of sitting around at home all summer, they met kids from all over the city.

"It made me feel not so much of a new girl at school too," says Jane.

Floor hockey, crafts, cooking, and dancing are all being offered as part of the club's program this fall. Sandwiched between those other things is a leadership program.

Up to 30 kids, 14 to 17 years of age, will learn about child development, how to put together and evaluate programs, and first aid.

They will be preparing for volunteer or paid work with the Victoria recreation department.

Man held in UVic sex probe

Saanich police have arrested a 21-year-old man in connection with a number of sexual offences on the University of Victoria campus and surrounding area over the past week.

Det.-Insp. Robin Stewart said the suspect was picked up in Courtenay on Thursday and is being returned to Saanich.

Stewart said the man, who is neither a student nor employee at the university, has been charged with one count of indecent exposure. Other charges stemming from an unknown number of molesting complaints in the area in the past week are pending.

He said it is not believed the man is the same individual wanted in connection with an attempted rape Sept. 19 and a rape Oct. 2. on or near the campus.

A police investigation into those incidents is continuing. Detectives have interviewed about 30 persons but don't have a suspect.

$25 pitch in fight to save Minnie

The Cadboro Bay Residents Association will ask members to contribute $25 each to continue the fight against a mixed housing development on Minnie Mountain at Ten Mile Point.

President Dick Boss said Thursday about 250 members have already donated $35 each to cover costs of legal proceedings against Saanich and Broadmead Farms Ltd.

The organization still owes $2,700 and its executive wants to clear up that debt before continuing the battle, Boss said.

He said the association isn't fazed by the recent B.C. Court of Appeal decision to overturn a Supreme Court judgment quashing the land-use bylaw for the 70-acre development.

But it needs about $5,000 to keep going, according to Boss, who said another $25 from residents would raise enough.

Options include taking an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada or starting legal proceedings all over again using a different technicality.

No action will be taken until a questionnaire mailed to association members has been returned to the executive, Boss said.

Help the invisible — Blencoe

By NORMAN GIDNEY

Ald. Robin Blencoe today formally announced his bid for re-election, saying he'll campaign to get Victoria city council to focus in the 1980s on the needs of "the invisible Victorians."

The young and the unemployed, native Indians, the poor and new immigrants have been neglected and forgotten in the drive to improve Victoria's physical character in the last decade, said Blencoe.

"We've been very much concerned with the physical problems of the city," Blencoe said in an interview.

"Now, however, I believe we are ready to move on to find new ways to enhance further this quality of life — ways that bring people to the forefront in our policies.

"It's clear that there are some serious things facing the city that perhaps we've put off and put off. They can't be dealt with on an ad hoc basis any more. We've got to pull it together."

Blencoe mentioned specifically the need for economic and employment opportunities and the invisible Victorians' needs for recreation and affordable housing.

For example, he said the city's recreation facilities "have been pretty much set up for the middle class and the invisible Victorians get shoved aside."

The city needs to do more and be more flexible to involve them. Day camps for children are one idea, he said.

"City council cannot solve these social problems on its own. An integrated approach is required," Blencoe said in a statement.

"We will have to work closely with other levels of government, with the many social agencies of Victoria and with the community groups that know well the social needs of their neighborhoods."

He proposed that the city establish a social planning council through which representatives of social service agencies and community groups would act as affiliates of city council.

It would be a clearinghouse for social services and a forum for initiating co-ordinated approaches to social problems. City council would appoint its executive board on the recommendation of the members.

Blencoe said it would not have any decision-making power but would co-ordinate social services through voluntary co-operation of its member agencies.

"At the moment our city deals with these social ills on a fragmented, ad hoc basis. A co-ordinated approach would doubtless improve the services to those in need and would also benefit the taxpayer financially by eliminating much duplication of effort and resources."

Blencoe, 32, was first elected to council in 1977 and has acted as a full-time alderman. Before that he worked with the justice development commission as a diversion worker helping youths in trouble with the law.

Combat concert tonight at UVic

A free concert with the theme Immortal Combat will be presented tonight at 8 at University Centre by the University Wind Symphony.

The Times earlier erroneously reported the concert was being held Thursday night.

The symphony, under the direction of Jesse Read of the UVic music faculty, will be joined by the Canadian Forces Band from Naden, conducted by Capt. A. C. Furey.

The music will depict, rather than celebrate, battles.

The finale will be Beethoven's Wellington's Victory, to be played by the combined forces band and the wind symphony.

Originally written to be played on the Pan Harmonicon, a machine designed to duplicate the sounds of a full wind orchestra, the piece features parts written for cannon.

Before the judge

A 31-year-old man charged with escaping and being unlawfully at large from William Head penitentiary Oct. 2 elected trial by judge and jury Thursday in provincial court.

Vaughan Grant Armstrong was reported missing following an outing at the Crystal Pool and was arrested three hours later in a residence on St. James.

Defence lawyer Peter Freeman made the election before Judge William Ostler and a preliminary hearing was set for Feb. 15.

A 32-year-old man who took a car for a joy ride was jailed for three months.

Russell William Griese, 811 Mary, pleaded guilty to theft over $200.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said Griese was stopped shortly after midnight Wednesday at Gorge and Jutland because the vehicle he was driving didn't have the headlights on.

Police asked Griese who owned the vehicle and were given a fictitous name. He then admitted he stole it because the keys had been left in the ignition.

Court was told Griese has a lengthy criminal record with previous convictions for obstructing a peace officer, possession of stolen property, breaking and entering, and being unlawfully at large.

A Swiss citizen was given concurrent 30-day jail terms for false pretences and obtaining food by fraud.

Jose Franco, 20, who said he was from Zurich, and Barcelona, Spain, was given the terms for passing a worthless $346.15 cheque for a camera and trying to cash a worthless cheque for a $24.25 meal.

Mulligan said the first cheque was drawn on a Vancouver branch of the Bank of Montreal and presented to Island Color Labs Ltd. The account only had $10 in it at the time.

On the same day, Oct. 15, Franco went to the Coach and Four Restaurant, 19 Bastion Square, and had a meal and tried to pay for it with a Canada Permanent cheque signed Richard Robert Wagner. Police were called and Franco admitted the cheque would have been worthless.

Duty legal aid lawyer John Hills told the court Franco was under emotional strain over a breakup with his fiancee. He said Franco needed the camera to take pictures of his fiancee but later left it as collateral for taxi fare.

Franco was convicted in Kamloops of a Sept. 8 Vancouver offence of fraud and was given a five-day jail term.

Anthony Goldsmith, 49, of Shawnigan Lake, was given a six-month jail term but Judge Ostler said he will strongly recommend the sentence be served at the Alouette River unit on the mainland for treatment of alcoholism.

Goldsmith pleaded guilty to his fifth drinking-driving offence which Mulligan said occurred Sept. 26 on Sooke Road.

The RCMP spotted Goldsmith's vehicle weaving and breath test readings of .20 and .19 were obtained.

Defence lawyer Robert Salmond said his client has been a severe alcoholic for some time.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Dale Elliott Thompson, 35, of 2031 Courser, $450; Fred Robert Knaggs, 71, of 1144-A Union, $450; Nelson Robert Miles, 54, of 1551 North Dairy, $450; Edward Colin Coutts, 20, of 1037 Wychbury, $450; and Thomas Gordon, 10041 Cotton Easter Place, $350.

In addition, Thompson was fined $150 for driving while suspended and Coutts was fined $100 for refusing a breath test demand.

Freedom of city for 5th

The 5th. (B.C.) Field Battery of the Royal Regiment of Canadian Artillery will receive the freedom of the city Nov. 4.

The ceremony will be held on Belleville Street and the lawns of the Legislative Buildings.

At a special city council meeting, Mayor Mike Young will present a traditional casket and scroll to the battery and in return will be presented with a commemorative regimental plaque by the battery's commanding officer, Major D.I. Smith.

A parade will leave Wharf and Courtney at 1:45 p.m., marching down Government to the review area.

Former members are invited to take part in the marchpast and later attend a reception in the Bay Street Armoury. Medals should be worn.

The freedom of the city gives infantry regiments the right to march through the streets of downtown Victoria "with drums beating, flags flying and bayonets fixed."

The guns of the artillery are its colors. The guns will parade behind the marching contingents and four 105-millimeter artillery pieces will fire three rounds of battery fire as an artillery-style "feu de joie."

The battery is celebrating 100 years of continuous service as Victoria's own artillery unit and is descended from the Victoria Battery of Garrison Artillery which was formed in 1878.

Parking relief for Camosun

Temporarily reduced parking fees, permit parking, a new parking lot, improved public transportation and landscaped parking lots — all these were approved Thursday by the Camosun College board of governors.

The various actions, covered by several motions debated before about 15 concerned students, should relieve the acute parking pains at the college's Lansdowne campus.

For a time, 25 cents will buy four hours of parking instead of two, and a $20 permit will allow parking in a new 161-space lot with access to Foul Bay Road.

The board will also try a variety of improvements to public transportation in hopes of encouraging faculty and students to leave their vehicles at home.

To mollify residents of the area who have complained about beautiful, semi-wild-campus grounds disappearing under parking lot pavement, the board decided to landscape all lots, existing and planned.

Long-range plans call for another 113 parking spaces to be added to the Foul Bay Road lot.

Parking lots now scattered around several campus buildings will be consolidated into a lot at the Paul Building, which now houses the Greater Victoria School Board.

In return for funds for a new school board headquarters, either in a new structure or a renovated building, the Paul Building will be turned over to the college.

Both sides lose

The B.C. Court of Appeal Thursday rejected petitions from both sides in the case of a Victoria woman awarded damages because her fingernails fell off.

Marcia Valerie Kory was granted $2,826 compensation in February, 1978, for the loss of her nails after taking nail enhancement treatment from Nails 'N Lashes Studio in Victoria and Vancouver. The decision in Victoria county court was by Judge M.L.T. Drake.

She appealed the amount of the award, and the defending companies — Western Nails 'N Lashes Studio Ltd., T. Dyson Holdings Ltd., and Victoria Studio 24 Holdings Ltd. — lodged a counter appeal.

The appeals were heard in Victoria by Justices J. Douglas Lambert, Peter D. Seaton and James A. Macdonald, who were unanimous in upholding the original decision and in refusing the companies' submission.

In the trial, Kory said she had spent a good deal of money in having the original work done, and in subsequent visits for repair and maintenance.

The story is 'Howard' it always is

By FRED ROTHENBERG

NEW YORK (AP) — At times during the World Series, Howard Cosell tried to be America's conscience, editorializing on how cities were the nation's backbone and that they would never die.

Sometimes he tried to be a Sunday school teacher, preaching about the moral fibre and character of two great baseball teams, two great cities and stout-hearted men like Earl Weaver and Chuck Tanner.

But at all times he was controversial and comical, emotional and entertaining, promotional and pompous, inconsistent and interesting, silly and stimulating. At the end of seven days in the October spotlight, we remember lots of baseball players but only one broadcaster — Howard Cosell.

And in the final analysis, that's what Cosell is really all about. If Omar Moreno is the catalyst of the Pirates, Cosell is the catalyst for a sports public riveted to the small screen. He stirs us up, gets us involved, makes us think. And he does this in front of millions of people, which is why ABC loves Cosell and officials of the other two networks say privately they would love to have him.

America normally chooses its media stars because of what they look like — they either have matinee-idol looks or wise, fatherly appearances. Cosell is unique; he's a media mega-star because of what he says.

And what he said this Series was not always "telling it like it is."

Cosell often sees things as so black and white, when they are really gray, that he paints himself into a corner. He sung the praises of Weaver so long that he couldn't be objective Wednesday night. Every single move that Weaver made in the ninth inning of the seventh game backfired, and Cosell never once pointed that out.

Right-hander Tim Stoddard started the ninth by facing righty Phil Garner, who doubled. Kent Tekulve failed to bunt Garner to third, and Weaver brought in lefty Mike Flanagan to pitch to left-handed hitting Omar Moreno. Moreno singled for one run. Weaver waved in righty Don Stanhouse to face righty Tim Foli. Foli singled. Lefty Tippy Martinez came in to face lefty Dave Parker, who was hit by a pitch. Righty Dennis Martinez relieved and promptly hit right-handed hitting Bill Robinson for the Pirates' fourth run in a 4-1 victory.

The next batter was lefty-swinging Willie Stargell, and Martinez got him to hit into an inning-ending double play. So much for the lefty-righty manoeuvring, but Cosell never saw this. He insisted, instead, on praising Weaver for never giving up.

Late in the first Series game, Cosell said a wire service report confirmed what Stargell had told him in a pre-game phone — that Willie had been robbed. If Stargell had really called Cosell, why hadn't Cosell told us this news earlier? If, as Cosell says, he wasn't sure the caller was Stargell, why couldn't he check it out?

And Cosell, who prides himself on asking the tough questions, had an opportunity to ask fellow ABC broadcaster Don Drysdale about Drysdale's near-fight with California pitcher Jim Barr during the AL playoffs. The questioning was conspicuous by its absence.

Then there is Cosell's constant harping against the print media, which often takes unfair shots at television in general and Cosell in particular. Cosell is always saying how the written press gives players labels — Bert Blyleven can't win the big game — or that writers second-guess managerial decisions. "Oh, the papers will have a field day with this move," Cosell would say.

But Cosell is the master at using these supposed newspaper labels and second-guessing in his questioning of players and managers.

In the final game, Baltimore shortstop Kiko Garcia made a bad throw to third. "If you want to second-guess Weaver, where was (Mark) Belanger?" asked Cosell. That statement was a copout because Cosell never says where he stands on playing Garcia or Belanger.

This all points up some inconsistencies in the self-proclaimed journalism giant. But it also gets to the bottom line on Cosell and his value to ABC.

The story is about Howard Cosell.

"DO DROP IN" is a familiar welcome but John Tonelli's "dropping by" during National Hockey League game in Boston Thursday didn't fall into typical-greeting category. New York Islanders' forward heads for a fall after hip check by Bruins' Dick Redmond. Islanders also stumbled as team, 3-2.

141-pound Cougar hailed most exciting newcomer

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Mark Morrison didn't think he would be playing major junior hockey this season because of his size.

"I thought I was too small," he confessed Thursday.

But speed and intelligence has superceded size and the Victoria Cougars can boast the most exciting newcomer to the Western Hockey League.

Only 16, the five-eight, 141-pound centre has become, after four homes games, the obvious darling of Cougar supporters. With six goals (and two assists) in his first seven games, he shares team goal-sniping honors with 19-year-old Greg Adams.

At the start, when he scored twice in his first WHL game, it seemed apparent Morrison was going to make his presence felt. A few weeks into the schedule, Victoria coach Jack Shupe was asked if he felt Morrison was going to be an exciting addition.

"Not 'going to be,'" declared Shupe. "He already is."

Morrison, who split last season between Delta Suns and Kerrisdale Terriers of the B.C. Junior League, frankly felt his size might hinder his chances.

"I thought they might hit me right back into tier two hockey," he said.

That might have been the case, but the bigger and more experienced rivals haven't been able to catch Morrison.

"I skate under their legs," he quips. In actual fact, he avoids the would-be hitters with speed. Morrison, who has practiced power skating for half of his 16 years, has to rate as one of the speediest forwards in junior hockey.

Morrison attributes his fast start to his wingers — 18-year-old Torrie Robertson and 20-year Bob Smith. Originally, Shupe selected the husky wingers for protective purposes. The line has developed into an exciting combination that has produced 11 goals in Victoria's first seven games.

"There hasn't been any pressure on me because of Torrie and Smitty," said Morrison. "When anyone comes at me, I take off the pressure by passing off to one or the other. They give the puck back to me when I get in the clear."

Whether by design or accident, the line's passing has been superior to any other combination on the Cougar team.

Morrison has four seasons of junior eligibility ahead of him. But chances are that he may ultimately be drafted before his time. It has happened to the Morrison family last summer.

Mark's brother, Doug, was drafted by Boston Bruins as an "underage" player, signed by the National League team but returned to

MARK MORRISON

Lethbridge Broncos to complete his junior eligibility.

It is mentioned because the Morrisons will be opposite sides of the fence Saturday when Lethbridge Broncos visit Memorial Arena to play the Cougars.

Mark is "looking forward to it."

Lethbridge moved into a first-place tie in the Eastern Division Thursday when they fought to an 8-8 overtime tie with the Breakers in Seattle.

The Broncos gained a share of top spot in the eight-team division when first-place Medicine Hat Tigers dropped a 7-4 decision to visiting Regina Pats.

Doug Morrison scored two of the Lethbridge goals to come up with his second successive two-goal game.

The Tigers got hit from another direction when the league fined coach Paddy Ginnell $500 for his conduct during Tuesday's game against Billings Bighorns. Ginnell and Billings coach Les Calder, who was fined $250, were cited for showing disrespect for an official and making a travesty of the game. Bighorn player Dean Renneberg was handed a 10-game suspension for becoming involved with an official.

The game was marred by 13 fights, nine of them in the final period.

Meanwhile, in New Westminster, the rookie-stacked Bruins, who have lost a team-record eight consecutive games, received some experienced player help with the acquisition of centre Marc Chartier from Saskatoon Blades. Chartier, 19, a two-year veteran, scored 16 goals and added 35 assists for Saskatoon last year.

Phil knew big night was due

By The Canadian Press

Having a three-goal night is not an uncommon experience for big Phil Esposito of New York Rangers. But having a premonition of a big night is another matter.

Esposito had thoughts about the latter then pulled off the former Thursday night to lead the Rangers to a 6-3 victory over Vancouver Canucks.

"I almost never feel too hot in warmups, but I leaned over to (line-mate) Don Maloney and said, 'Gee. I feel great.' Esposito recalled. 'We can get a few goals tonight.'"

The three-goal performance marked the 32nd time in his career he has recorded the feat. He also assisted on the game-winner by Anders Hedberg.

In other action, Quebec Nordiques won their first ever NHL game, downing Colorado Rockies 5-2, Boston Bruins edged New York Islanders 3-2 and Philadelphia Flyers defeated Atlanta Flame 6-2.

The Rangers reached the net early and often, scoring twice in the first 2:20 and building a 4-0 lead by the time 15:56 had been played.

"I'd like to have those first 10 minutes back," said Canucks coach Harry Neale. "I thought they had 10 guys on the ice the first couple of shifts. We couldn't get the puck out of our zone unless there was a faceoff at centre ice."

That happened at 58 seconds, after Dave Maloney scored; at 2:20, after Esposito scored; at 8:51, after Ron Duguay scored, and at 15:56, after Esposito and rookie Doug Sulliman fed Hedberg.

Things got so bad for Vancouver that Neale ended up benching left wing Ron Sedlbauer — a 40-goal scorer last season — for ineffectiveness.

"Ron is a vital member of this team, but his workmanship has to improve or it's going to be tough on this hockey team." Neale said.

Sedlbauer, suffering the early season blahs, agreed.

"I'm having trouble doing the things I know I can do," said Sedlbauer. "Even my interviews aren't as good as they used to be."

Esposito, meanwhile, seems as good as ever. Stan Smyl and Thomas Gradin scored 56 seconds apart in the first period and Chris Oddleifson brought the Canucks within 4-3 at 3:32 of the third.

In Boston, tough guy John Wensink of the Bruins is hoping to change his image.

Wensink, who became an enforcer under former coach Don Cherry three years ago, now wants to become known as a scorer and a complete hockey player.

Wensink took a step, albeit a small one, in that direction as fired home a 25-footer early in the third period to give the Bruins the victory.

Wensink broke open a tied game with his goal at 4:04 of the third period, after Steve Tambellini of the Islanders was credited with a goal early in the second period when Boston rookie Ray Bourque accidentally put the puck into his own net while trying to clear a pass-out.

Billy Harris scored the other New York goal while Stan Jonathan and Bobby Schmautz scored for the Bruins.

Colorado, who provided Winnipeg Jets with their first victory in the NHL last week, performed the same service for the Nordiques.

Mark Tardif picked up a wild Rockies pass midway through that final period and scored the winning goal to break a 2-2 tie.

Real Cloutier, who scored 75 goals last year in the WHA, scored twice against Colorado to run this season's total to five.

Stamps to alter style for meeting with Lions

VANCOUVER (CP) — Calgary Stampeders are expected to change their offensive philosophy drastically Saturday night when they meet British Columbia Lions at Empire Stadium in a showdown for second place in the Western Football Conference.

The Stampeders have been plagued by inconsistency at quarterback this season in compling a 9-4 record and chasing the Lions (9-3-1) and Edmonton Eskimos (10-2-2) in the Canadian League's toughest conference.

Ken Johnson, expected to start at quarterback against the Lions, says Calgary would like to work running backs James Sykes and Willie Burden into the passing game more often against the Lions, who have been burned often this season by opposing passers.

"We've got to start taking more advantage of things the opposition defences give us," says Johnson, who has thrown 12 touchdown passes so far this season. "With any defence, once they take something away from you, they're leaving themselves vulnerable somewhere else."

Johnson says Calgary started the season using the running backs at lot in the passing game, "but in the past few games we got off it."

The Stampeders have been vulnerable to blitzing defences this season and the Lions are expected to send their linebackers on the pass rush more than ever because of the absence of injured defensive tackles Frank Landy and Doug Seymour.

Landy and Seymour were both injured last weekend in Ottawa during a two-point loss to the Rough Riders. Landy underwent surgery for torn knee cartilage while Seymour is out with damaged ankle ligaments.

John Hufnagel, who also comes off the injury list, joins Johnson for the B.C. game and it was Hufnagel who threw a 75-yard scoring pass to slotback Willie Armstead here Aug. 28 which appeared to give Calgary a win over the Lions.

But that was the game Joe Paopao emerged as the Lions' new quarterback. Taking over from injured Jerry Tagge, Paopao directed a last-minute drive, covering 83 yards in four plays. Jim Young caught a 12-yard touchdown pass from Paopao on the last play of the game to give B.C. an 18-17 decision.

B.C. still is without Tagge, who has a torn knee cartilage. Tagge says he might be ready for the playoffs, but until then, the Lions only have untested Mike Nott at quarterback behind Paopao.

City haven for half of Canada's scullers

AL MORROW
. . . gets eastern customers

By JIM CRERAR

Al Morrow has been minding the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association store in Victoria for just over a year and is already attracting customers from the east.

It comes as no surprise. When CARA named Morrow as proprietor of its branch operation on the west coast, the 29-year-old Hamilton native knew his hottest sales item would be the climate.

Eastern hotspots like St. Catharines, Hamilton, Toronto, Montreal and London, Ont., cool off in a hurry after Thanksgiving, leaving the rowers frozen out until spring break-up. When you're up to your gunnels in snow, the sparkling winter waters of Elk and Burnaby lakes out here in Lotusland look pretty inviting.

Elk Lake, which Morrow and other members of the Victoria Rowing Society hope to turn into a national training camp site, has lured two top rowers and a leading coach from Ontario this fall.

They'll be in evidence at the first two major regattas of the fall here Saturday and Sunday.

The coach is Ted Daigneault, a St. Catharines native who has put together women's rowing programs at the University of Western Ontario in London and Brock University in his home town. Coach of the women's national junior team competing in pre-Olympic rowing in Moscow last summer, Daigneault is helping Morrow coach UVic this year.

He'll guide the women's varsity eight and hopes to land an articling position with a Victoria legal firm. He's a law graduate from the University of Western Ontario.

The rowers are Brian Elliot, fourth in the world youth championship single sculls in 1977, and Andrea Schreiner, fourth in single sculls in last summer's world championships in Bled, Yugoslavia, and only 17-100ths of a second off a bronze medal. It was the best performance by any Canadian.

Both are from the Ridley College grad's rowing club in St. Catharines.

In addition, the rowing program at Elk Lake has attracted Marius Felix, sixth seat in the Canadian eights that won a Pan-Am silver. A Brentwood grad, Felix is a member of the Vancouver Rowing Club and is training with UVic this winter.

Meanwhile, Kătie Burke of Victoria City, a national team rower, has decided to postpone a move to the Vancouver area in favor of coaching UVic's novice women.

The Victoria Rowing Society, an umbrella group, is anxious to find out how the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association feels about this area as a national training site. It may get an answer Nov. 23-25 when CARA holds its annual meeting at The Empress.

Morrow feels there is a good chance a national sculling camp will take place here in January.

"We have a strong case for the sculling camp because the talent is here right now," he pointed out. "So is Lief Gotfredsen, who has been asked to serve as a sculling coach with the national team."

Gotfredsen, coach at Victoria City, was named CARA's national coach of the year for 1978.

Morrow estimates about half of Canada's top scullers are in the Victoria area. As well as Schreiner and Elliot, the Victoria City Club boasts Bruce Ford and Pat Walter, Pan-American Games gold medallists in double sculls and eighth in the world championships at Bled, and Janice Mason and Lisa Roy, 10th in double sculls at Bled.

Saturday's Head of the Gorge Regatta, running from 11:30 a.m. to about 4 p.m., has UVic as the host and has attracted entries from Victoria City, UBC, Vancouver Rowing Club, Burnaby Lake Aquatic Club and individual competitors from Edmonton, Calgary and Seattle.

Men and women will compete in open, lightweight, novice and veteran's races in singles, fours and eights.

Victoria City plays host Sunday to the Elk Lake Fall Regatta which has pretty much the same entries and few additional events, including men's and women's 1,000- and 2,000-metre races. It runs from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Kenyon to Bristol

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Whitecaps of the North American Soccer League have announced the sale of central defender Roger Kenyon, 28, to Bristol City of the English League's First Division.

Aussies get draw with strong stand

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — Australia, having followed on 212 behind India, managed to salvage a draw on the final day of the fourth cricket test Thursday.

The match ended when Australia was all out for 413 in its second innings — a lead of 201.

India's hopes of going two up in the six-match sereis were boosted when they reduced the Australians to 242 for five during the morning session Thursday.

But a defiant 76-run sixth wicket stand between Peter Sleep and Dave Whatmore put the game beyond India's reach. Whatmore made 54, his second half of the match, and Sleep 64.

India may have recorded its second successive victory over the Australians had it not allowed Whatmore two escapes. He was dropped when he had scored 10 and should have been run out soon after.

Scores: India 510 for seven declared; Australia 298 and 413.

First United romps

Adrienne Mason and Mona McIvor each scored 24 points as First United Stars defeated Esquimalt Rebels 101-15 in a Juvenile Girls' Basketball League game Thursday.

Ross gives Victoria first fivepin award

Jim Ross has cracked the ice for Victoria-area fivepinners in this season's Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest, but the score still stands at 3-1 in favor of Chemainus contestants.

In the opening week of the 17th annual competition, fivepin honors went to Chemainus as Pat Ohman, hitting for an 825 three-game series, took the women's award and Leo Kossey, with a slick 904, collected the men's award.

Janet Woodley, rattling the pins for a 264-268-303 — 835 total in the Monday Nite League at Chemainus Bowlarena earned the women's award in the second week. Kossey came back with a fine 921 series, but contest rules that prevent a bowler from winning more than one weekly award in the same category left the door open for Ross.

Rolling in the Wednesday Major League at Mayfair Lanes, Ross added a 349 final game to earlier counts of 234 and 277 for an 860 series that gave him first place in the men's division.

Mattick signs as manager of Blue Jays

Times News Services

Bobby Mattick, co-ordinator of instruction for Toronto Blue Jays' minor league system, has been appointed as manager of the American League baseball club.

Mattick, 63, replaces Roy Hartsfield who was not rehired when his three-year contract expired at the end of this season.

Mattick has had no major league managing experience. He spent part of one season managing Ogden of the Pioneer League in the 1950s and most of his career has been as a scout. Two of his most famous signings were Frank Robinson and Vada Pinson for Cincinnati Reds.

Another major league vacancy was filled when Dallas Green was named manager of Philadelphia Phillies. Green thus gets a chance to finish the job he started as interim manager when Danny Ozark was fired in August.

Green, the Phillies' farm director, went into the dugout for the final month of the season to find out why a team favored to win its fourth straight NL East title had dropped to fifth place. Under Green, the Phillies won 19 and lost 11 and overtook Chicago Cubs for fourth place, but still trailed Pittsburgh Pirates by 14 games.

Among other hirings and firings in baseball:

John Sullivan, a former catcher for Detroit Tigers, has been hired as the bullpen coach for Atlanta Braves. Sullivan, who last year was the Kansas City Royals bullpen coach, played briefly in the major leagues with Detroit, Philadelphia and New York Mets.

The addition of the 39-year-old Sullivan completes manager Bobby Cox's staff for the 1980 season. Returning coaches include Bobby Dews, who will switch from the bullpen to third base; Tommie Aaron, first base, and Cloyd Boyer, pitching. Sullivan replaces Alex Grammas who joined the coaching staff in Detroit.

In Montreal, pitching coach Jim Brewer has resigned to pursue personal interests and will become a consultant to the athletic department of Oral Roberts University at Tulsa, Okla. Brewer has handled the Expos' pitchers for the last three seasons under manager Dick Williams.

The Expos pitching staff led the league in earned-run average in 1979, posting a collective 3.14 ERA.

The Expos did not name a replacement.

In Bloomington, Minn., Jerry Koosman, who made his American League debut last season by winning 20 games, signed a three-year contract with Minnesota Twins.

Koosman, 35, was acquired by Minnesota last December in a trade with New York Mets after the veteran lefthander had threatened to retire if the Mets didn't trade him to his home state. Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Koosman settled for a 20-13 mark, notching the 20th win on the final day of the season. It was the second time Koosman has won 20 games in his 13-year career. He was 21-10 with the Mets in 1976.

No shortage of sails for waterfront lookers

People along the Dallas Road waterfront will be treated to a sailing spectacular Sunday when the Royal Victoria Yacht Club hosts the annual Lipton Cup and Whitehouse Trophy races.

There will be two divisions, one for boats racing under the International Offshore Rule and the other for boats using Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet ratings.

The IOR boats, who will be competing for the Lipton Cup, will get their start at 10 a.m. in the vicinity of Harling Point in the Gonzales area, while the PHRF boats will begin racing five minutes later.

The races are open to all boats registered in the RVYC sailing program as well as boats of other clubs in the Pacific International Yachting Association, providing they have valid IOR certificates or PHRF ratings. Skippers of visiting boats must complete their registration forms prior to the race.

Both races will be sailed off the Victoria coastline.

A total of 75 boats were on the line for RVYC's annual fall regatta, held on the weekend. Doug Hemphill and Dave Richardson sailed their Fleetwood to first place in the PHRF division for larger boats. Behind Fleetwood came Roy Hingley's Romada II, Eric Jespersen's Polyestermite and Greg Oliver's The Distant Drummer.

Jack Matthews's Professor topped another PHRF division, being trailed by Dick Readshaw's Massilia II and Bruce Klaver's Wings.

Bob Callow's Minstrel and Knotsure, owned by Frank Piddington and Sid Bryant were tied for first place in the third PHRF division. After them came Ron Lindsey's Carson and Peter Lopatecki's Crown 23.

Jim Morris's Madeleine won in the Viking 33 class while top Cal 20s were Peter Harrison's Sunbeam and Kim Wilson's Manitou. Topping Catalina 27 competition were Gerry Porter's Lickety Split and Ron Jewula's Beowulf. John Malleson's Sunday won the Thunderbird series, runner-up being Gary Cooney's Hocus.

The club's dinghy sailors will be out for series racing again this Saturday. The first race starts at 1:30 p.m. in Cadboro Bay.

Dinghy sailors of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will have series racing in Esquimalt Harbor on Sunday. Things get under way at 1 p.m. The squadron's cruising class boats will race for the Gillard Trophy while the Sailerettes will be competing for the Sedon Trophy. Both of these races start at 10 a.m.

The enthusiastic Hobie Cat fleet is all set for another fall and winter series of racing. The races will be held every other Sunday, the first session being off Willows Beach on Sunday, Oct. 28.

Winner of the Hobie Cat 16 series will receive a free return air trip to Hawaii and the thrill of being able to sail with Dean Froome, Hobie Cat 16 world champion who lives in the Hawaiian Islands. Wetsuits will be up for grabs in Hobie Cat 18 competition.

The fleet had a good turnout for the Vancouver Island championships, sailed in the Willows Beach area. Urs Ruegsegger was top 18 sailor, runner-up being Bruce McLeod. In 16 competition it was John Norwood, followed by Stephen Knight.

The Canoe Bay Sailing Club has a six-miler slated for Saturday, starting in the vicinity of the government wharf at Sidney at 1 p.m. Members are hoping for better weather conditions than what they faced in last Sunday's race when lack of wind prevented any of the boats from finishing within the time limit.

The Naval Officer Training Centre at CFB Esquimalt produced some pretty hefty cmpetition for its sixth Conway Trophy regatta. Eleven teams competed in crash whaler, 420 sailing and whaler pulling races.

The Kootenay division was over-all winner, receiving the coveted Conway Trophy, made from a piece of the original training vessel's taffrail. The division placed second in both the crash whaler (half rowing and half sailing) and whaler events and accumulated the lowest over-all score of 11 points. Tied for second place with scores of 12 points were teams from HMCS Qu'Appelle and the Louisburg division.

The 1980 tide and current tables are now on sale at authorized chart dealers and at the Institute of Ocean Sciences on West Saanich Road. Volumes 5 and 6 cost $1:75 and the composite edition sells at $3:50.

It might be rushing the season quite a bit but these could help solve stocking-stuffer problems if you know a skipper who seems to have everything.

Buckaroos defeat Athletics

Western Home Buckaroos went on a scoring rampage in the second period en route to a 6-3 victory over Victoria Athletics in a South Island Big Six Hockey League game Thursday.

The Buckaroos, tied 1-1 after the first period, broke loose for five goals to take a 6-2 margin into the final period.

Bill Pettinger scored two and Wayne Proceviat, Brice Collins, Neil Paloney and Pat Finner got the others for the Bucks.

Brian Hamilton, Dan Peck and John Entzminger scored for the Athletics.

Bid dollar champ

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Spectacular Bid became horse racing's all-time single-season earnings champion Thursday as he defeated a field of five in the $361,000 Meadowlands Cup.

The $234,500 first-place purse pushed the three-year-old Bid's 1979 earnings to $1,279,183, surpassing Affirmed, who won $1,148,800 as a four-year-old this year.

Bid, who went off as the 1-9 favorite, set a Meadowlands track record by covering the 1¼-mile distance in 2:01 1-5. He crossed the finish line three lengths ahead of Smarten, ridden by Sam Maple.

Valdez finished third.

Spectacular Bid captured the Kentucky Derby and Preakness but was third in the Belmont after stepping on a pin before the race.

Bid trainer Buddy Delp indicated the Meadowlands Cup would be his horse's final run of the year unless another match with Affirmed could be set up. But negotiatios broke down and plans were dropped.

Bid now has a two-year record of 17 victories, two seconds and a third in 21 races.

Bunting style suits Kratzert

-PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Bill Kratzert says an injury forced him to change his style of playing golf, but after his opening-round eight-under-par 64 in the $200,000 Pensacola Open, he says he may not change back.

Kratzert and Morris Hatalsky blistered the 7,133-yard Perdido Bay layout Thursday, grabbing equal shares of the first-day lead with rounds that tied the course record.

"I've had tendinitis in both wrists since the beginning of the year and it's forced me to change my style," Kratzert said. "All year I've had to lay off hitting the ball long. I've had to bunt the ball down the fairway and that's not my style.

"But I'm sort of afraid to change back now."

Kratzert, teeing off early before the wind kicked up, went on a birdie tear on the back nine, nailing a 10-foot birdie putt on the 10th hole and then chipping to within one foot of the flag for a tap-in birdie onthe 11th.

Dan Halldorson of Shilo, Man., led Canada's challengers with a 67. Tour veteran George Knudson of Toronto fired a two-under 70, Dave Barr of Kelowna was five off the pace in a group at 71 and Jim Nelford of Burnaby shot a 74.

Change up front for Timbermen

Nanaimo Timbermen will have a new look in the 1980 Western Lacrosse Association season although several of the old familiar faces will still be around to help get the job done.

The biggest change will be in the front office after four Nanaimo residents purchased control from last year's group of nine owners headed by Bud Dumont.

Heading the new executive is former general manager Ray Morrison. He will act as president. Others are directors Gordon Schmidt and Dave Weighell and coach Larry McNabb. Earl Nicholson, who acted as spare goalkeeper last year, will replace Morrison as general manager.

The other new look will be on the floor as the Timbermen will sport new uniforms and also some new players.

Timbermen plan to strengthen the club with at least two players from the East and also at the WLA junior draft in Vancouver, Nov. 3. Some of the top players expected to return are Ron MacNeil, Brian Evans and Mac Maude.

Timbermen will continue to play their games at Civic Arena.

Lee gets a berth with NL all-stars

Times News Services

Montreal Expos' Bill Lee, an injury-plagued American Leaguer the last few seasons, was among those named today to The Associated Press National League all-star baseball team for 1979.

Lee, selected as the left-handed pitcher on the AP's NL team, reversed his field this year by winning 16 games for the Expos and compiling a 3.04 earned-run average in 222 innings.

The victory total was the most that Lee had compiled since winning 17 games for Boston Red Sox in 1975.

Lee polled 95 votes from a panel of sports writers and broadcasters to win the berth over Philadelphia's Steve Carlton, who had 76.

Joe Niekro, a 21-game winner with Houston Astros, was the choice as the right-handed pitcher over teammate J. R. Richard. The voting margin there was 120-83.

Bruce Sutter, who posted a league-leading 37 saves for Chicago Cubs, was the runaway choice as the NL's relief pitcher, collecting 196 votes.

San Diego's Dave Winfield, with 34 homers, 118 RBI and a .308 batting average, was the leading vote-getter with 216 for one of the outfield berths. The rest of the outfield included Dave Kingman of Chicago Cubs with 199 votes and Dave Parker of Pittsburgh Pirates with 152.

Kingman led the NL in homers with 48 and drove in 118 runs. Parker had a .310 batting average, 25 homers and 94 RBI.

The remainder of the team included three players from St. Louis Cardinals — first baseman Keith Hernandez (176 votes), shortstop Garry Templeton (129) and catcher Ted Simmons (114) — along with second baseman Dave Lopes of Los Angeles Dodgers (158) and third baseman Mike Schmidt of Philadelphia Phillies (109).

Hernandez's season included a league-leading .344 batting average and 105 RBI. Templeton hit .314 and Simmons .283 with 26 homers and 87 RBI.

The American League all-star team, announced earlier, featured four members of California Angels — Don Baylor as designated hitter, Rod Carew at first base, Bobby Grich at second and Brian Downing behind the plate.

The rest of the team included Boston's Fred Lynn and Jim Rice and Baltimore's Ken Singleton in the outfield, Minnesota's Roy Smalley at shortstop, Kansas City's George Brett at third, Boston's Dennis Eckersley as the right-handed pitcher, Baltimore's Mike Flanagan as the left-handed pitcher and Jim Kern of Texas as the relief pitcher.

Downing outpolled Darrell Porter of Kansas City, 161-77.

Eckersley outpolled California's Nolan Ryan 99-49, had a 17-10 season and a 2.99 earned run average.

Reuben Metson, who earned $4.25 an hour working in a Michigan factory, isn't a family man. In fact, he hasn't seen his relatives in 22 years. But he has been declared the heir to $189,000.

"I'm going to have one, and one shot only, of a celebration," Metson, 47, said after he proved to a San Francisco judge that he was a long-lost heir to the estate of his great-aunt. "I've had all kinds of life experiences," he said. "And I'm not going to become any of that nouveau riche stuff now."

Bianca Jagger will have to divorce rock star Mick Jagger in England, not California, where she hoped to get a bigger settlement. London's Court of Appeal denied her request to move the proceedings to the U.S. The Nicaraguan-born Mrs. Jagger had wanted the case heard in Los Angeles Superior Court. Her U.S. lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, had said she hoped for a settlement of several million dollars there. By contrast, her British lawyer, Robert Johnson, told the London court that in Britain the highest award of maintenance by a judge is just over $1 million.

Actress Maureen Stapleton could lose her tavern if she doesn't start paying the tax bill. Stapleton, a Troy native, owes the city $3,531.39 in back taxes on the Albia Tavern for three years beginning in 1976, city records show. The city also says the actress owes $1,500 for 1979.

They've already turned down one request, but folksinger Joan Baez says she will approach the Beatles, as "personal friends," to do a charity concert for Indochinese refugees. Baez, on tour in Southeast Asia to dramatize the plight of the refugees, said Wednesday the Beatles were her first choice for the cause.

Off-duty New York policeman James Mantello didn't think the foot-high painting of a nude woman on the side of Michael McCloskey's van qualified as art. Neither did a nearby woman who thought it "disgusting" and asked the officer to do something about it. He did. McCloskey now faces a charge of displaying offensive sexual material.

Guru Maharaj Ji, known to his followers as "God on Earth," has vanished from the Palm Island estate and his palatial mansion is now on the rental market.

Dear Abby:

I'm a man, over 70. My wife died suddenly several months ago, and I found out that I just couldn't get along without female companionship.

As a young man I suppose I had the usual number of girlfriends, but I haven't courted for 50 years, and am rather rusty.

I recently asked a woman in my age group to accompany me to a variety of social engagements. She was most agreeable. She turned out to be a warm, lively, affectionate companion, and I must admit that I am crazy about her!

The problem: Her kisses. Abby, this woman's kisses shake me from top to toe. I don't know why. I hate to call it 'technique' or suggest that she has developed her kissing purposely, but she must be conscious of the effect her kissing has on males. She is loving, but I am glad that not all women kiss the way she does. There must be a happy medium.

Overwhelmed

Dear Over:

Are you complaining? While kissing is basically natural, techniques are developed. This woman is giving you a message. She's probably crazy about you, too, so don't dismiss it as a routine 'tongue-in-cheek' matter.

Dear Abby:

Asking in Alaska says, 'Kids who live together before marriage don't deserve wedding presents, so they shouldn't be sent any.' And you replied, 'It won't work. Most parents (and relatives) are so glad that the kids finally made it legal, they send gifts anyway.'

Well, here's how I handle it: Out of respect to the parents, I send a gift. I buy the first low-priced, ugly, useless piece of junk I see, have it gift-wrapped and sent.

I figure the gift is as appropriate as the wedding. And if Mr. and Mrs. Sleazy Morals have any perception at all, they will get the message.

Realistic

Dear Realistic:

Since you send a gift 'out of respect to the parents,' how much respect do you think a 'low-priced, ugly, useless piece of junk' will convey?

You'd be ahead to save your time, money and 'respect,' and send nothing.

Dear Abby:

Regarding the letter about the man marrying a girl who was six months pregnant with another man's child: that's my son you are talking about.

Her brother-in-law took advantage of her. My son went ahead and married her, advancing the wedding date so he could take care of her.

That child will be treated exactly like all my other grandchildren!

Proud Grandpa

Dear Grandpa:

Congratulations — for more reasons than one.

Feeding child, not emotions

By JANE BRODY
New York Times

At a family potluck party, the parents watched with pride as their 10-year-old son chose one slice of ham, one slice of cheese, an assortment of fresh vegetables, rice pudding, a plain roll, melon and grapes. Among the items he bypassed were pastries, potato chips and fruit-flavored gelatin with whipped cream. Before eating the ham, he carefully trimmed off the fat and pushed it aside.

"We must be doing something right," the father remarked. "All the other kids dove right into the cake and chips and dessert and ignored the fruit and salad."

Millions of food-conscious parents who want to get their children off to a good nutritional start face this problem: How do you get your children to eat what's good for them when peer pressures, television advertising, supermarket displays and street-corner temptations do everything they can to thwart you?

There is no one correct way. Everyone who's had a modicum of success as a parent has his or her own gimmicks. But certain basic principles apply across the board.

First, as a parent, you should know just what your child needs to be well nourished. In most cases, it's less food than you might think. Many childhood eating problems begin soon after the first birthday, when the child's growth and appetite suddenly fall off.

The average child increases his weight 300 percent in the first year of life, but only 22 per cent in the second, and by the fifth, it's down to 12 per cent a year. If your child continued to eat at the same rate as during infancy, he'd grow up to weigh about 300 pounds.

But anxious parents, thinking 18-month-old Jennifer must be starving because she ate no lunch and had only milk for supper, try all sorts of tricks, threats and bribes to get her to eat more.

These gimmicks endow food and eating with emotional values that may then supersede nutritional considerations. A child who must eat her green beans if she's to get her dessert will come to value dessert as the most important part of her meal.

Similarly, food should not be used as a pacifier (for example, offering cookies to distract a child who's scraped his knee) or as a reward for good behavior, nor should it be withheld as a punishment. This can lay the foundation for overweight in later life caused by eating for emotional reasons, rather than primarily to satisfy a physical need for food.

At the same time that a baby's growth slows, independence grows. The baby who used to like everything suddenly refuses everything green, or won't eat meat, or eats something eagerly one week, then refuses it the next. It's the unusual child who doesn't try to assert his independence and growing sense of taste by eating only what he wants.

JESSA COX of Victoria is a three-year-old who doesn't eat much, but what she does eat is mostly good stuff, says her mother Janet. Jessa likes yogurt, fruit, is not much of a meat eater and would rather eat crackers than cookies. Her mom says her daughter is not influenced by aggressive junk food marketing practices — she simple follows the eating examples of the adults around her.

If he won't eat vegetables, give him more fruits to make up for the vitamins and minerals he may miss in his vegetables. Better yet, try crisp raw vegetables — carrots, celery, tomatoes, cucumbers, even sweet peppers. Most young children prefer them to cooked vegetables. Or you can sneak extra vegetables into the soup, stew or meat loaf.

If the child's physician is satisfied with his growth rate, don't worry about how little you think he's eating. A child who is offered meals that are reasonably well balanced is unlikely to develop nutritional deficiencies. During the course of a week, he'll probably eat enough of what he needs, even though the day-to-day intake may seem erratic.

However, per pound of body weight, a child needs more nutrients than an adult. If a child is given too many high-calorie foods that are low in all nutrients but sugar — soft drinks, cookies, cake, candy and the like — he may quickly fulfill his caloric needs without consuming enough of the essentials.

How, then, do you keep Johnny away from the junk food and get him interested in what he needs to grow on? You might try some of the following tips.

Set a good example. Children learn primarily by watching and emulating their parents' behavior. Don't expect your child to do otherwise if he sees you munching potato chips or devouring a box of cookies. And if you eat haphazardly, perhaps skipping breakfast and eating lunch on the run, you may have a hard time convincing your children to sit down to three meals a day.

Don't keep junk food in the house. Many people justify their regular purchases of soft drinks, cookies and ice cream by buying them "for the children." Then they are dismayed to watch the children eat them, often in preference to carefully prepared meals.

These foods can certainly be bought on occasion. Or, if you prefer to have them on hand at all times, control the rate and time at which they are consumed. Instead of putting the box of cookies on the table, serve the child two cookies and make it known that that's all he'll get.

Keep healthy substitutes handy. Stock your refrigerator with unsweetened fruit juices, fresh fruit (it may be expensive in the winter, but so are cookies year round), unsalted nuts, cut-up raw vegetables. Make your own dip for raw vegetables using yogurt, cottage cheese, herbs and spices. Children love the ritual of dipping and eating. Serve popcorn, preferably without butter, in place of chips.

If your young child refuses to eat a sandwich on anything but white bread, it's not worth making an issue over it. But try a whole grain bread now and again, since chances are he'll come to prefer it eventually.

Make your own nutritious treats. Let's face it, most children adore sweets. If you make your own cookies and cakes, you can control the amount of sweeteners and the type of fats used. Try healthy, minimally sweet muffins or quick breads containing fruits, nuts, whole grains and polyunsaturated vegetable oil or margarine. If the children help you make them, they'll be almost certain to want to eat them too.

You determine the after-school snack. Too often, children come home from school famished and proceed to eat junk all afternoon, spoiling their appetite for supper.

Decide on the snack ahead of time — for example, two cookies and milk, milk pudding, cheese and crackers, fruit and cheese, half a sandwich and juice — and serve it right after school. Then, no more food until supper. If the child is thirsty an hour before supper, offer water.

Counter propaganda with facts. It may seem pointless to present nutritional arguments to a 3-year-old who's clamoring for the latest in sugar-coated cereals. But in fact, it pays to start as early in life as possible telling your child what's good for him and why, not as a lecture or punishment but as simple, loving facts: "I want you to grow up with healthy teeth. That's why I don't let you eat candy whenever you want it." "I want you to have strong bones. That's why I give you milk instead of soda."

As the child gets older, you can elaborate on your explanations so that the connection between good eating and good health is better understood. When your children start watching commercial television, point out the sales pitch behind each sponsor's message.

Chances are it won't be long before they take up the game themselves and soon stop asking for things they see advertised on television.

Show them you really mean it. If you tell a schoolchild he must have a decent breakfast (which he should if he's going to be good-natured and able to concentrate through the morning), get yourself and the child up early enough so that there's ample time to prepare and consume a good breakfast.

If you say no to a request for some junk food item, don't capitulate when the child starts screaming in the store. And don't let other relatives subvert your nutritional goals by giving the child forbidden foods behind your back.

Start them young preparing foods. A 5-year-old can be taught to make the dinner salad, and he might even be more interested in eating it as a result. Young children can also help prepare things like meatballs, stuffing and bread. There are many cookbooks available for children of all ages and levels of ability. Select one that doesn't emphasize snacks and desserts.

Or, if you think the best way to get your child interested in cooking is through snacks, try a cookbook that has recipes for healthy snacks, such as "Love at First Bite," by Jane Cooper and Sherry Streeter (Knopf, $3.50).

Impotent need enlightened support

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I've been married for six years. We have one child who is 3 years old. In the past year and a half, I have become impotent. I don't know where to turn. My wife thinks the whole problem is because I'm under terrible stress in my business. Is such a problem always psychological?

Mr. T.O.

Dear Mr. O.:

Many people, younger and older than you, mistakenly believe that there is a shame or stigma attached to impotence. Consequently, they will go on for years before devoting their energies to finding the basic causes and making an effort to eliminate them.

Because the psychological implication of impotence is constantly being emphasized and overemphasized, along with the feeling of inadequacy, guilt and embarrassment, the problem becomes magnified.

You do, indeed, have someone to turn to. Your family physician regards impotence as a problem that is no different from a broken leg, pneumonia, or an attack of appendicitis. Confidentiality is the essence of a a doctor-patient relationship, no matter what the character or severity of an illness is. Your guide, therefore, to the solution of your problem is your doctor. Open, mature conversation may pinpoint the reason for your impotence or establish leads to be followed by specialists.

There was a time when the traditional attitude toward impotence was that it was purely psychological in origin. This has been proven to be not always true. In fact, new approaches to the problem of male impotence indicate that only about 25 per cent of the cases of this male sexual disorder can be attributed to psychological reasons.

Today, there is greater concentration on underlying physical factors that can account for this problem. New tests have been devised for accurately measuring the arterial flow of blood to the penis. This becomes a valuable aid in determining some forms of impotence. Accurate studies of the blood for the presence of testosterone, the male sex hormone, can determine deficiencies if they are present. Neurological and urological consultations can be of enormous value in pinpointing causes of impotence.

The problem now is studied by the co-ordinated efforts of the family physician, the psychiatrist, the psychologist, the urologist, the neurologist and even by surgeons. Psychological support and drugs have been remarkably effective.

You have taken the first giant step. With the support of your wife, you are now in the ideal position to pursue the problem and conquer it.

Dear Mike: The engine in my 1979 Camaro has an annoying habit of bucking when I lift my foot off the gas pedal at speeds below about 30 mph in high. This car has the 250-cid Six and 3-speed stick. When I downshift to second, the bucking starts up again at about 20 mph. The dealer says there's nothing he can do. — Buckaroo

Dear Buck: I can't pinpoint the problem, but it's a matter of tuning — getting your idle speed down, setting various vacuum systems correctly, and being sure everything in your smog system is working properly. Yes, your dealer can fix it, but such annoyances often take a long time to track down, and he knows you might hit the ceiling when he hands you his bill.

Dear Mike: I have a 1970 Dodge Challenger that I want to put in dead storage this winter. It'll have to be left outside in the rain and snow. Should I cover the car with a tarp or one of these commercial car covers I see advertised in the magazines? If so, which type is best? — Hibernating

Dear Hibe: No type is best. I strongly urge you not to cover the car at all. Car covers should never be used except in dry weather, not even inside a garage. That's because all covers "sweat," no matter what the vendor says. Water condenses on the underside and causes paint to chalk and chrome to rust. Too, wind whips the cover and burnishes or abrades the finish. The only thing covers are good for is to keep off dust and sunlight; never water nor fog nor snow.

Dear Mike: I recently found and bought a totally original, unmutilated 1953 Volkswagen — the split-window Bug. I've heard that there's a club devoted to vintage Volkses. How do I catch up with it? — Just Plain Volks

Dear Just: Write the Vintage VW Club of America care of Terry Shuler, 817 Fifth St., Cresson, Pa. 16630.

Partnership study offered

Marriage as a partnership will be explored during an eight-week series starting next Thursday at James Bay family drop-in centre.

The series is sponsored by the centre and by the capital region branch of the B.C. Council for the Family.

It is designed for people entering a marriage, but all couples interested in examining and improving their relationships are welcome.

Topics that will be covered include conflict resolution, communictions, support systems, legal aspects of family life, sexuality and budgeting time and money.

Educating married couples to recognize and avoid some of the pitfalls that contribute to the growing divorce rate in this province is the aim of the course.

Recent statistics on marriage in B.C. in 1978 show that 14,805 religious marriages and 6,582 civil marriages took place and 9,199 couples were divorced.

For registration or further information, call the family drop-in centre at 388-6291.

Grinder's relief absorbs shocks

NEW YORK (UPI) — Help is on the way for persons who get head and neck pains from grinding their teeth, a University of Illinois dentistry professor promised Wednesday.

Dr. Martin D. Lerman said help is in the form of a "dental shock absorber" — a water-filled plastic mouthpiece. He claims it helps short-circuit head and neck aches radiating from jaw muscles taut from grinding motions.

The small appliance worn inside the mouth keeps layers of fluid between upper and lower molars.

Lerman has been fine-tuning his invention for 14 years and used it successfully on 500 patients. He said it is effective.

The appliance actually keeps the jaw pain from starting by cushioning the shock from grinding teeth — especially those ever so slightly out of alignment, Lerman claims.

"It normalizes the bite, relieving tension in the jaw muscles and other muscles of the face, head and neck."

In a report prepared for delivery at the International Association for Dental Research and the American Association for Dental Research, Lerman described results of a study involving 64 students at Kendall College in Evanston, Ill.

He said 78 percent of the students suffering headache and 57 percent complaining of tension reported "marked to complete relief."

Band back in Victoria

The "all new vitamin-enriched" edition of the Sample-Stearns Band will make a long awaited return to Victoria, Monday. It will be putting in a week-long stint at Harpo's Cabaret.

"We were finding it kind of self-defeating trying to pull off some of our more subtle music inclubs and bars," says Bill Sample. "This new material is a blatant but friendly attempt to score points on a rock 'n roll level."

The new sound of the band is likely to reflect its recent association with Los Angeles producer David Foster (noted for his work with Earth, Wind and Fire, Boz Scaggs, Alice Cooper, Hall & Oates, George Harrison and many others). But even more directly with its search for a record label.

On offers from record companies thus far, Sample says: "The interest is hot, the budgets are cool; more later."

The Harpo engagement marks lead singer April Fulladosa's healthy return after a throat operation.

Dear Dr. Powell:

I am a 17-year-old girl and in Grade 13. I don't have a boyfriend and I want one very much. I am told that I am pretty but I think I'm too fat and this is why I don't have a boyfriend. I have tried many diets and now am on a starvation one.

If I soon don't lose weight, I am going to do something very drastic. My doctor says that I am not fat for my size but I think and know I am. If I don't get a suggestion from you, I think I might as well end my life.

Answer: You may be heading toward a condition referred to as anorexia nervosa. It is serious, and you need help to understand what is happening and to stop it before you starve yourself. Since you don't mention your weight, I can only assume that it's normal. The doctor who has examined you says your weight is average for your height, but you still feel you are fat. So somewhere there is a mix-up in the signal your brain is receiving about your body. Your image of it has become distorted and all the talking and reassurances by your friends and your doctor will not correct the gap between how you see yourself and how your friends see you. There is no situation in which a starvation diet is either indicated or recommended and serious dieting should be done under medical supervision.

If you won't accept your doctor's assessment or your friends' assurances, what can I tell you that will make a difference? If what you want is to have a boyfriend, starving yourself won't make one appear like a genie out of a bottle.

Boys initially may be attracted to a girl with a slim, beautiful body but continuing attraction and friendship depend much more on shared interest.

Dear Dr. Levine:

I am a 14-year-old boy and I feel rather troubled. I am an above-average student in school, kind and helpful, and I don't do anything to offend anyone. The only problem is that I'm not that popular. Everybody seems to dislike me and spreads false rumors about me. I've tried to speak to them, but they back off. Last year I was in the school drama club and worked on the yearbook, so I do get involved. I have tried everything that I can think of, but I can't get very many friends. I'm not really too athletic but this is no reason to hate me. I'd be a super friend to anyone who would just give me a chance. I don't want to be unhappy again this year. Most of the kids at school vandalize things and get drunk but I'm not going to do this just to get some friends.

Answer: You are obviously going through a very painful period, made even more difficult because you have evidently tried to change the situation. You say that you can't get "very many friends." Does that mean that you have one or two? I am assuming that your loneliness stems from the fact that you have none at all. I'm also concluding that your relationships within your family (parents, siblings, cousins, etc.) do not fill the gap.

In addition to feeling isolated, however, hou are assuming that you are actively "disliked," even "hated," and that people are spreading "false rumors" about you. This is quite serious if true, because it means that (aside from some nasty individuals out there) many good people are avoiding you, perhaps because of some vibes that you are giving off. If it is untrue — if it is only your preception of things and you are not really disliked — I am still concerned, for it implies that you may have some other problems.

It would be ridiculous for me to suggest that you merely "try harder." You obviously have been doing just that, by attempting to speak to your schoolmates, by joining drama, etc. What you are describing is a lot more common among people your age than you realize — but of course, that doesn't make you feel any better. Usually all this is temporary, and most young people suddenly develop shared interests, activities and friends. This may well happen to you soon. Examine what has worked for you in the past, in your relationships with other kids.

Sometimes when we're down, we give off messages that we are aloof or cold, rude or hostile, when in reality we feel none of these things. Could this be a part of your experience? Finally, I am a bit concerned about your feeling of being hated or persecuted. If this continues much longer (another few months, let's say), perhaps you could speak to a school counsellor, or someone at a teen drop-in centre or clinic.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria V8W 2N4. Readers wishing to talk with someone about their problems can call NEED at 386-6233.

Real live theatre

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Public success and personal passion are no guarantees for staying alive artistically.

Perhaps if we lived by a barter and exchange system by which we traded what we did best for what we needed to keep doing it, those attributes would suffice us.

But as things are the truth is that there is no formula for staying alive as important as money; cool, crisp folding money. And plenty of it.

No performing arts organization anywhere in the world can rely solely on box office take for its lifeblood. Who would or could buy tickets at $50 or $100 apiece? If ballet and opera companies, symphony orchestras and theatres could regularly charge that sort of tab, they might possibly subsist without other sources of funds.

That's why it's such a false premise to judge a company's worth mainly by its box office. It can have full houses for every performance and still find it difficult or impossible to make ends meet.

Struggling arts organizations in Victoria, groping for a toe-hold, quickly learn that they must help themselves if they are to survive long enough to establish their quality and value to the community and so become eligible for government aid.

There are two that are currently facing that reality. Both are companies whose programs propose to fill in quite serious gaps in the local arts-entertainment scene. They are Spectrum Dance Circus and Kaleidoscope Theatre.

Spectrum is the subject of this particular article.

Under the guidance of artistic director Constantine Darling, the company came into full focus with a solidly successful season last year. Performances were given to sold-out audiences at McPherson Playhouse. Around the city there was general acknowledgement that the fledgling group was on the right track artistically.

Everyone who cares about dance and has seen the potential of this company, would like to see Spectrum stay and continue to grow. That's what they would like too.

But it is a question of hanging in there, meeting bills and keeping the group together until the early months of 1980 when certain grant money will be available.

In the meantime — and in fact, for all time — self-help is essential.

Self-help for Spectrum takes the form of a fall premiere performance of all new works to be presented at McPherson Playhouse Tuesday at 8 p.m. This to be followed up by further fund-raising efforts.

Highlights of the program will include Constantine Darling performing a solo piece choreographed for him this summer by Eva Von Genscy, artistic director of Les Ballets Jazz of Montreal. There will also be a dance theatre piece conceived by John Krich of the University of Victoria theatre department and choreographed by Darling.

Other works by Darling, Lynda Raino, Marsha Main-Pimlott, Alison Windecker and Granville Johnston will be performed.

Margaret Atwood weekend reading

First of the fall season's free readings at Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort, will present distinguished Canadian author Margaret Atwood reading from her new novel, Life Before Man. The reading will take place Sunday at 8 p.m.

Open Space utters a warning: seating is limited and in fact it is adviseable to bring something to sit on.

This, and other readings scheduled for the winter including John Newlove in November, are co-sponsored by Canada Council.

Buying good knives takes sharp-minded study

joan watson
for consumers

"No matter how much money you have to spend, you need a knife — even if it's only to cut a sandwich."

That's what Rolf Meinecke says. He's the owner of a Toronto knife specialty store, and with 20 years in the business he knows a lot about what makes a good knife.

Most of us have drawers full of knives purchased with little attention, and now unused for a variety of reasons. They rust too easily, they won't hold a sharp edge, the handle grooves don't fit our fingers, or whatever.

These knives might represent a lot of money unwisely spent. So before you invest $50 to $100 in "a good set of knives" know what to shop for in advance.

As with other consumer goods, it's wise to buy from a retailer you trust, and a manufacturer whose name you know. Pick it up and handle it. Does it feel good in your hand? Are the finger grooves in just the wrong place? Are there seams or rough spots in the handle?

Mr. Meinecke recommends a basic set of three knives. He starts with a paring knife under 4 inches long, and a chef's knife of about 9 inches. The chef's knife should be as long as you can comfortably handle. That often means 8 inches for women, though some people can handle a ten inch blade.

The third knife is a utility knife about 6 inches long. If you do a lot of boning, like chicken legs or lamb legs, you may prefer to get a 6 inch boning knife. If you serve lots of roast meat, a slicer is in order — the longer the better.

Your own kitchen habits and style of cooking will tell you what kind of knives you need. If you do a lot of Chinese or Japanese-style cooking, you will want chopping tools. Many Oriental cooks get by with only one cutting tool — the cleaver.

If you are a sloppy cook, you definitely need to buy stainless blades. Carbon steel knives require more care and attention. Since they stain rather easily, they must be wiped immediately after use and given a quick rub with salad oil.

Many manufacturers are dropping their carbon steel lines for that reason.

Henckel and Wusthof-Trident have developed processes for making stainless steels that retain much of the quality of the carbon steel. The processes are expensive, and so are the knives.

Go for a blade that isn't too brittle or too bendy. Poor quality stainless and carbon steel knives can "explode", or snap, sending fragments flying.

Watch for safety features, too. A good knife will have a guard where the handle and blade meet to protect your fingers. (This is also a good indication that the blade is forged steel, not stamped out.)

Some models have protruding hangers which can be very uncomfortable if the metal digs into your palm. Make sure the handle is designed so you can chop without rapping your knickles.

Of course, it is crucial that the knife be sharp. If it isn't, it won't do the job. You are more likely to have an accident with a dull knife, too, since you will use extra force to compensate.

Because of that you will want to invest some money in a sharpener. The best is a good "steel." They cost about $15 or $18, and should be about 10 inches long. Once you get the hang of it, it is the fastest and easiest way to keep an edge sharp. Most come with instructions, or ask the salesman at a knife specialty shop to show you how.

Avoid using electric sharpeners. They ar up too much of the blade. If you have no other way to sharpen a knife, use the sharpener without turning on the motor. Just draw it through.

Experts agree that you should never put a good knife in the dishwasher. The heat and moisture will damage the handle, and clanking against other cutlery will chink or chip the blade.

So will improper storage. Never throw them in a drawer. A good knife rack will protect your investment, keeping the blades from touching anything. Don't use them for cutting frozen foods, either. The extreme temperature difference might cause a flaw to break the blade.

A chipped blade doesn't necessarily mean you have to throw out the knife. If there is a knife specialist in your area, you can have the blade ground down below the chip, then re-honed. The blade will be almost as good as new, but of course a little smaller.

The basic set of three knives will cost about $50 for a quality carbon steel variety, and about $100 for the specially-processed stainless knives. Occasionally good knives are featured in specials, so keep your eyes open.

Seeing the name of one of the great manufacturing areas (Soligen, Sabatier, Sheffield) doesn't guarantee a great knife. Check out the materials, and the general feel, carefully.

Boxed sets offer no money-savings. They are primarily sold as gifts. When buying for yourself, put together a set precisely suited to your needs.

The European names are familiar to many, but North American brands are less well-known. Some of them are Gerber, Dexter, Ekco, and Chicago. The Grohman Company of Nova Scotia has put out a limited line of kitchen knives as well.

A three piece set from one of these makers would vary from $10 to $50, depending on the brand.

By JOHN GOUDAS

Lolling in a comfortable rut for far too long, As the World Turns is about to display signs of new vitality. The cynical may snort at the prospect, but come January, World spins for a new image — via California's Bridget and Jerome Dobson, the brains behind the high-rated Guiding Light.

Besides grinding out a hundred pages a day for Light at the moment, Bridget and Jerry are also concocting scripts for their January debut on World. That should be a cue for Guiding Light fans to adjust viewing habits and become acquainted with the haunted souls on As the World Turns.

Highly involved characters, a stepped up pace, and melodrama are certain to surface on As the World Turns. Bridget and Jerry promise a partial renovation — booster shots for the leading troublemakers resulting in a transfer of attributes that worked so well for the gang on Guiding Light.

The Dobson touch may not be apparent right off the bat since the writers are just becoming familiar with the characters, but viewers can expect a quickened sense of action, and, if lucky, even a jot of humor.

Humor on As the World Turns? Jerry claims there's humor in Guiding Light, so you'll see some in World.

The youngest, and perhaps the most attractive writing team in soap opera, Jerry and Bridget Dobson are workhorses.

Some months ago when Britain's witty playwright Tom Stoppard gave a lecture at Cal-Santa Barbara University, he spent an evening inquiring how the Dobsons could turn out such a prodigious amount of work daily. What was their secret?

Apparently their secret is teamwork. Jerry does the first edit, then Bridget takes over. Jerry is the plotter, the action man; Bridget specializes in character.

Says Jerry, a man raised on walnut ranches: "Our fantasies appear on the screen. They have a rich, full life of their own. Nothing is off limits."

Bridget, daughter of General Hospital creators, Frank and Doris Hursley, was urged to avoid the writing game by her parents because "it is a dirty business... writers are tossed about like crates of grapefruit." Bridget, happily, didn't listen.

The Dobsons have it all, and they work like Trojans for it.

volunteering

Work experience. All kinds of people are searching for it — students, mothers re-entering the work force, young people, the unemployed, and working people wanting to make a change in careers.

However, in today's competitive job market, work experience is hard to come by. The inexperienced job-seeker is often unable to find a position which will accept someone without qualifications.

There is a way to develop a record of work experience useful in many areas of employment. Volunteer work is becoming an increasingly valued source of reference for today's employer.

Some volunteers have been asked to accept paid employment from the organizations for which they have volunteered. Through their unpaid work, they have proven themselves to be capable and dedicated and, when paid positions are available, they have an advantage over other applicants — they are known.

Other volunteers provide employers with detailed descriptions of the duties involved in their volunteer positions, as well as references from the voluntary organization. This experience is usually given the same serious consideration given to paid work experience.

If you're looking for volunteer experience, consider:

A day care centre in the Colwood/Langford area needs volunteers, twenty years of age and up, to work with the supervisor, playing with the children, mixing paints, and cleaning up. The centre is especially keen to have Colwood or Langford area residents who enjoy young children and who could work three hours a week.

A volunteer keypunch operator is needed by a Victoria health care organization. The volunteer would spend one evening a month at the University of Victoria processing data for the organization.

Hospitals and activity programs for the elderly need volunteers to teach a range of simple to complex crafts and hobbies, such as ceramics, sewing, quilting, weaving, bead and felt work, knotting and silkscreening.

Volunteers are needed to introduce educational kits on cancer to teachers in Victoria elementary schools. A commitment of two hours a week during school time will be asked of volunteers.

A school for the mentally handicapped in the Colwood/Langford area needs volunteers to provide one-to-one assistance with swimming at the Centennial Pool twice a week.

Office volunteers are needed to help with reception, record keeping, phoning and typing in a community office in the Sidney area.

Glendale is looking for tutors to work on a one-to-one basis with mentally handicapped residents who require special education in the areas of basic reading, writing and arithmentic. The volunteers would be asked to devote regular evenings for six months to a year if possible.

Volunteer dance instructors are needed by a variety of Victoria organizations. Volunteers couldchoose to work with teens or adults. Teachers of discodance are especially in demand at the present time.

There are many such positions listed with the Victoria Volunteer Bureau. If you are interested in a volunteer job, for the experience or simply for the enjoyment it can provide, contact the Victoria Volunteer Bureau at 386-2269.

Kue-Cumbrian grocer sure knows his unions

By SHERRI BARRON

LONDON (CP) — His neighbors suspect he has gone barnarners but greengrocer Kevin White is laughing all the way to the bank.

He may never win a medal for spelling but as a business tycoon, he's brimming with potential.

Three years ago 43-year-old Kevin innocently posted a sign outside his small shop in Kendal, Cumbria, advertising his unions.

Astonished customers thronged inside to correct his error — and most of them bought his unions.

Kevin was skilled enough at arithmetic to realize onion sales were booming.

The time was ripe for a few more mistakes.

"You don't spell ternips like that," laughed a female customer, carting out half a dozen.

Karrets and pertatores vanished like there was no termoerrer and eager customers queued up for kuekumba at 15 pence (35 cents) for a harf.

"I'm only a small shopkeeper and I'm not the best speller," said Kevin in a telephone interview.

"The first mistakes were original but after a while I noticed more customers starting coming in, to comment on my signs and my mistakes.

"They always ended up buying a load of stuff."

White says sales have increased about 12 per cent since the whole idea started about three years ago.

"Sales have really blossomed this year. So many people just stop to laugh at the signs and then end up coming in. The signs attract a lot of tourists too."

Giggling housewives cracked up over Kevin's heggs and bought them all while the busy shopkeeper simply could not keep enough orinjis and mellerns in stock.

Since the shop is near an elementary school, says White, teachers occasionally stop in. Some say they're relieved children don't go there for their English lessons.

"But now I'm doing it on such a big scale, even the children know it's a joke."

And White has no intention of pulling the plug on his innovative business gimmick.

Why, last week everyone went barnarners over the eatin apels at seven pence (18 cents) eech.

Brezhnev death rumor denied

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet and East European sources today denied a torrent of Western reports that Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev is dead, but several acknowledged that he is ill.

The nature or severity of the 72-year-old Kremlin leader's illness was not disclosed. But one source said his malady "was hardly enough to justify the kind of stories that are going around."

Although foreign radio broadcasts that have a huge Soviet audience focused on the Brezhnev rumors, there were no signs of serious public concern in Moscow.

Brezhnev, who has not made any appearances since his return from a visit to East Germany on Oct. 8, has disappeared from sight for days or weeks on previous occasions and always returned to view.

Although his exact condition remains a tightly guarded Kremlin secret, Brezhnev has been reported over the last five years to be suffering a variety of chronic ailments, including heart disease, emphysema, gout and cancer of the jaw.

Unconfirmed reports of his death or serious illness began turning up Thursday in New York, Washington, Rome and Helsinki.

"We have heard the rumor," state department spokesman Hodding Carter told reporters in Washington. "We have checked with Moscow and we have no information to substantiate it."

An official at Communist Party headquarters told The Associated Press on Thursday: "With rumors like that, he should live for 100 years.

The latest question about Brezhnev's health appeared to be linked in part to an operation that Moscow sources said was performed here last Sunday on a Politburo member by three eye specialists from Baltimore. The sources would not name the patient.

HOME AT LAST has been found for Georgianna Malloff's 70-foot maple totem pole. New Westminster civic officials had pondered the problem for two years, and have chosen a spot in Queens Park.

Stats look bit rosier

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. economy rebounded from a second-quarter slump to grow at an annual rate of 2.4 per cent from July through September, the federal government has reported.

Much of the growth was attributed to a surge in sales, which had suffered from April through June because gasoline lines inhibited shopping and a shortage of crude oil depressed trade, said a federal analyst who asked not to be identified.

The third-quarter growth figure was the strongest so far this year, though still weaker than the 3.5 per cent expansion in the third quarter of 1978.

Calif. strangle suspect held

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Angelo Buono Jr., 44, of Glendale, Calif., was arrested today in connection with 10 murders linked to the Hillside Strangler, the name given to the killer of 13 women in 1977 and 1978.

Kenneth Bianchi, 28, Buono's cousin, earlier today entered pleas of guilty to two similar murders in Bellingham, Wash.

Bianchi was earlier charged in five of the Strangler murders as well as the killings of the two western Washington co-eds.

1. Win the king of diamonds with the ace, draw trumps, and exit with the jack of diamonds, discarding a club after South follows low. North wins the diamond jack with the queen and must hand you the game-going trick whether he returns a heart to your K-J-2, a club to your K-6, or a diamond that gives you a ruff and discard.

If you adopt any other method of play you make the contract if you get lucky, but you will have lived dangerously.

2. The bidding indicates that North has the ace of diamonds, and the opening club lead has all the earmarks of a singleton. If, after winning the club in dummy with the king, you now led a trump, you would run the risk of North winning the trump with the ace and putting his partner on lead with a heart for the killing club return.

The best way to prevent this from happening is to cash the ace of spades at trick two and continue with the queen of spades! Assuming that South follows low, which is likely on the bidding, discard your seven of hearts on the queen of spades. It does not cost anything to make this loser-on-loser play, because you are merely substituting a spade loser for a sure heart loser.

North wins the spade with the king, but can do you no harm. He can't put South on lead for the club return that would defeat the contract, and you arrive home in a blaze of glory. The only other trick you lose is to North's ace of trumps. This will teach North not to double you in the future with some such hand as:

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Maintain emotional equilibrium by laughing at your own foibles. Special calls, messages, relatives and short trip dominate scenario. Open dialogue with one who nurses a grudge, justified or otherwise. Pisces, Virgo natives are in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent on production, investment, financial gain. Cancer, Capricorn person figure prominently — and so does the number 8. Older individual lends benefit of experience in constructive manner. You'll locate what had been "missing."

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You get what you go after — know it and proceed accordingly. Cycle high, circumstance favor your efforts. Highlight independence, initiative and direct approach. Reaffirm objectives. New contact could lead to "something big."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Area previously dark will receive benefit of greater light. A dream, properly interpreted, could prove prophetic. What appeared to be a setback will boomerang in your favor. Look behind scenes for valid conclusions. Answer to question is affirmative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friend proves loyalty by aiding you to regain sense of direction. Emotional involvement can prove beneficial. Emphasis on fulfillment, getting major points across. Give full play to intuitive intellect.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent on joy which results from solid achievement. Gemini, Sagittarius native figure prominently. Horizons widen — path is cleared for promotion, added prestige and recognition from one you admire. Socal activity accelerates.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect emphasizes travel, long-distance calls, special opportunity related to publishing and communication. Another Aquarian, a Leo and a Scorpio might play significant roles. Be willing to "dismantle" for ultimate purpose of rebuilding on a more solid base.

PISCES (Feb. 19-Mar. 20): Emotional involvement is magnified. Nothing occurs halfway — for now, it is hot or cold, with no "lukewarm" in picture. Married or single, love is a dominant factor. Creative juices flow. You'll feel more alive and glad of it.

IF OCTOBER 20 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY . . . you are basically loyal, sensitive, emotional and prescient. Cancer, Capricorn persons play important roles in your life. Relationship that started towards end of last year is flowering. What originally was a cause for brooding could now be a reason for optimism. You succed when following first impressions. You have a knack for sensing pulse of public. You can be especially successful in dealing with women or products designed for women.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"That's interesting," Ted exclaimed, putting down his pen. "You're only a teenager, but I guess you know what a reciprocal is."

Bill nodded. "Sure. You write one over the number, like a third is the reciprocal of three."

"Okay, then listen to this," Ted told him. "If you add the squares of the reciprocals of your age and mine you get the square of the reciprocal of Ruth's age."

To [illegible] guys buying or selling boats to use the Trading Centre call the broker or office nearest to you. We will come over and do an evaluation survey. Fill out a specification sheet then your boat goes on the board. If a boat is priced right it usually goes the same day. If you're looking for a new boat get your requirements listed on the buyers board. You will be called when a suitable boat comes up. The Trading Centre has been designed to ease the chore of buying or selling a boat. We have interim finance plans to get around the problem of no financing for "A" licenses. Our company lawyers are specialists re: fishery or License regulation problems. These are some of the advantages of using the Trading Centre.

The Lord is my Shepherd

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures
He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Famine wipes out under-5s

600,000 aged five to nine face death, says aid expert

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Most children under five years old have died in Cambodia and only immediate and massive aid can save thousands of others in the starving country, a famine expert said Thursday.

Dr. Jean Mayer, the president of Tufts University and a noted nutritionist, said there still may be time to save 600,000 children between the ages of five and nine with increased aid.

"If we do not, the Khmer nation, the great majority of the people of Cambodia, will be eliminated by starvation," Mayer told a briefing held by the Federation of American Scientists.

Mayer, who is vice-chairman of the Presidential Commission on World Hunger, said 1,000 tons of food a day is needed to stave off starvation in Cambodia and 2,500 tons a day to feed the population adequately.

The federation, an organization of 5,000 scientists that advises the U.S. government on scientific issues, joined Mayer in supporting increased U.S. aid to Cambodia.

President Carter already has made available $7 million in U.S. aid. Any additional funds must be approved by Congress.

Congress is considering an additional $35 million in aid, about one-third of the $110 million the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund estimates will be needed in the next six months to prevent widescale starvation among Cambodia's 4.5 million people.

International efforts to provide relief have been hampered by Cambodian authorities first refusing to admit there was a starvation problem, and later by attempts to control who got relief supplies.

Despite this opposition, the agencies have been moving aid across the Thailand-Cambodia border into areas controlled by Pol Pot guerrillas who are fighting 170,000 Vietnamese troops in control of about 90 per cent of the country.

Amid reports that eight Vietnamese regular army divisions, totalling more than 40,000 men, were poised to launch an attack to wipe out the pro-Chinese rebels, international relief agencies today frantically poured fruit and rice into starving Cambodia ahead of the anticipated attack.

Trucks carrying food and several dozen international aid specialists traveled to the mass border camp at Taprik, 135 miles southeast of Bangkok, where Cambodian refugees are streaming across the border.

International aid supervisors said flights to Phnom Penh, the Vietnamese-run capital of Cambodia, have been doubled to two runs a day by cargo planes carrying up to 40 tons of food, medicine and trucks.

Vietnam has warned that more than a million people may die of starvation and disease in Cambodia. But foreign analysts in Thailand believe, on the basis of intelligence reports, the number in imminent danger of death is closer to 2.2 million, half the population of Cambodia.

In a sudden reversal of policy, Thailand has agreed to accept unlimited numbers of refugees fleeing the war in Cambodia.

Thai Prime Minister Gen. Kraingsak Chomanan, who only four months ago ordered some 40,000 refugees to be forcibly sent back across the frontier into Cambodia, told a meeting of diplomatic and refugee officials that any refugees crossing the border and seeking asylum in Thailand would be welcome to stay.

"Now I have changed my mind," Chomanan said. "Those people who are determind to come for a safe haven in Thailand will be welcome. There will be no more forced repatriation."

In Peking, meanwhile, China and Vietnam returned to the conference table today for the 13th session of their peace talks, but there was no indication of any progress as they argued about the situation in Cambodia and Laos.

Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister Han Nianlong said relations between the two countries cannot be resumed unless Vietnam stops its "aggression and expansion" in Cambodia and Laos.

Vietnamese Vice-Foreign Minister Dinh Nho Liem said the situation there is no business of China the Vietnamese-backed government in Cambodia is in "firm control of the whole country."

Han, just back from New York where he led China's delegation at the United Nations General Assembly, said Vietnam's "aggression" in Cambodia and "control" over Laos proves Hanoi is adhering to hegemonist policies.

"Without troop withdrawals from Kampuchea (Cambodia) and Laos, how can they prove they have no hegemonist ambitions?" he asked.

Formaldehyde-cancer tie alarms Nader researcher

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Formaldehyde, used in particle board, plywood, sporting goods and a variety of other consumer products, has been found for the first time to cause cancer in laboratory animals.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission, in releasing the findings Wednesday, said it was too early to assess the health implications. But Dr. Sidney Wolfe, head of Ralph Nader's Health Research Group, called the development alarming and said it should spur the government to order a reduction in workplace exposure to the chemical.

The still uncompleted test was sponsored by the Chemical Industry Institute of Toxicology, a scientific group supported by 36 U.S. chemical organizations. It said the study on the effects of inhalation of formaldehyde gas "showed the development of squamous cell carcinoma of the nasal passages of the laboratory rats."

It added the tumors were visible to the naked eye within 16 months after the start of the study.

Both the CPSC and Wolfe said the tests are the first animal evidence formaldehyde causes cancer.

The CPSC has been investigating formaldehyde on a variety of fronts, including complaints about fumes from improperly cured particle board and urea-formaldehyde foam insulation.

"These findings are significant," reported Dr. John Clary, chairman of the Formaldehyde Institute's medical committee. "There was a real biologic effect which has to be attributed to exposure to formaldehyde."

About 6.4 billion pounds of formaldehyde were consumed by American industry last year, half of it in resins, used as adhesives for particle board and plywood.

The next largest use — about 10 per cent of annual production — is for molding a large variety of plastic parts for automobiles, plumbing fixtures, appliances, hardware, lawn and garden and sporting equipment, the commission said.

Wolfe said the findings are "very, very alarming" because they show development of a rare form of cancer very early in the tests and at relatively low doses.

Pressure increased for Oswald to be dug up

Times News Services

DALLAS (AP) — Enough doubt has been cast on the identity of the body buried in assassin Lee Harvey Oswald's grave that the body should be dug up to see whether President John F. Kennedy was killed by an impostor, say Dallas County medical officials.

The Dallas County officials point to discrepancies found by their own check of records and to others alleged by a British author who says Oswald may have been impersonated by a Soviet agent.

But officials in adjacent Tarrant County, where Oswald's grave is located, say they will do so only if ordered by a court.

Oswald, named as Kennedy's lone assassin by the Warren commission, was shot to death while in police custody two days after Kennedy's assassination in 1963.

Petty's office was approached in August by a lawyer representing British author Michael Eddowes, whose book The Oswald File suggests a Soviet agent took Oswald's place while Oswald was in Russia, came to the United States, killed Kennedy and is buried in Oswald's grave.

Eddowes said today he will fly to Dallas to help authorities seeking to have the body exhumed.

Homosexual priests approved

LONDON (AP) — After pondering the controversial subject for five years, the Church of England produced a report Thursday saying homosexual relationships can be justified and recommending that homosexuals not be barred from the priesthood.

But it rejected the concept of marriage between homosexuals, prompting a gay Christian group to term the report "woolly-minded."

Two bishops involved in preparing the report clashed over its findings and the church's Board for Social Responsibility, which ordered the inquiry, said it is "deeply divided" about the result.

Release of the 34,000-word report and its attached 3,500-word critical comments followed last month's decision by the U.S. Episcopalian Church's House of Bishops that it is "not appropriate" to ordain a practising homosexual. The three million U.S. Episcopalians belong to the 65 million-member Anglican Communion, which has its centre in the Church of England.

Rt. Rev. Graham Leonard, bishop of Truro and chairman of the board, wrote in a foreword that his members have "not adopted or endorsed the contents" of the report.

"The question of homosexuality raises questions to do with the authority of scripture and the church's tradition," he said. "We do not think the Church of England is yet ready to declare its mind on the subject of homosexuality."

The bishop said the report and critical comments "can make an important contribution to forming the mind of the church."

Rt. Rev. John Yates, bishop of Gloucester who led the report-producing group of 11 men and two women, said the report will be debated by church members.

Child labor suits filed

NEW YORK (AP) — The U.S. government has filed civil actions against 85 shops in New York City's Chinatown, charging them with employing children as young as 10, underpaying workers and often making them work in firetrap sweatshops infested with rats and cockroaches.

"Working conditions were reminiscent of a time we thought was long gone," federal official Frank Mercurio said. Some children were working for up to 12 hours a day for as little as $50 a week.

The investigators visited 500 garment shops employing 5,000 persons in a 35-block area of Chinatown and said they found violations in 35 per cent of them.

Spread out those new shrubs

gardening

hilda beastall

Planting of ornamental shrubs is on the gardening schedule for many in October. Usually the choices have been studied and the locations for planting carefully chosen.

Human nature being variable, it is likely that some errors of placement will occur. One of the most common is that of planting shrubs too close, forgetting their ultimate spread in size.

Fortunately, this can be corrected in most instances if done within a couple of years. But a good rule is to give each one twice the space you first allot — unless you are quite familiar with the possible size of all the plants, and the pruning that can be done to limit size without spoiling natural beauty of outline and without interfering with flowering.

Another good rule is to remember that some shrubs are known to like company of others of the same genus and of the same family.

This is particularly true of rhododendrons which are seldom seen at their best as isolated specimens. A rhododendron garden even on a small scale is delightful with its contrast of form as well as blending of colors.

Usually there will be another member of the Ericaceae family, to which rhodos belong, as a further contrast. This may be something as different in appearance as Enkianthus, or Kalmia latifolia, both outstanding for their flowers. Enkianthus also adds its own colorful small-leaved foliage in fall, though Kalmia's chief beauty is in its June "Calico-bush" flowers, quaintly pleated, delicately pinkshaded.

The reason for all these very different-looking shrubs enjoying each others company is their common liking for a fine humus-filled, completely lime-free soil. To accomplish this condition, we must make the soil on the acid side of neutral.

Also the same type of summer moisture conditions suits them all — water for their somewhat shallow roots and humidity around their leafy tops where new growth takes place as soon as spring and early summer flowering is finished.

Summer-flowering heathers are companion plants for ground covering, but keep them controlled by annual pruning after blooming. Their tendency is to smother the eight to 12-inch species rhododendrons which hold the interest with their variation of leaf shape and size, and the even greater variation in shape and size of their flowers. Newcomers may not link the deciduous azaleas with rhodos, but they are one section of the vast Rhododendron genus.

A bed for these shrubs should be made up by digging the soil, adding fresh compost soil, and a coarse-grind type of peatmoss in the ratio of one shovelful to 10 of soil. This is a rough guideline.

Remember that peatmoss must be soaked in a garden cart, tub or five-gallon can overnight or until it is saturdated. Stir it often with a garden fork until all lumps are broken down and no dry particles are floating on the water surface.

The constant stirring is needed just as dry flour must be stirred into liquid in the mixing bowl or it remains floating on top.

Put dry into the soil, peatmoss removes moisture gradually from shrubs and other plants, and from the soil.

Even after a winter's coastal rains, peatmoss will be relatively dry in spring, and the shrubs may be dried and dead by June.

Don't take that chance when it just needs forethought in soaking the peat thoroughly until it is saturated before using in the soil mixture of the planting holes.

Other communities of plants may be chosen for this fall's planting. Choose your own; be sure they are compatible if they are to grow in adjacent planting areas and give them space for development.

Urethane padding termed fire hazard in buses and cars

By ROBERT GILLETTE
Los Angeles Times

Urethane foam, a flammable plastic padding used by the hundreds of millions of pounds in buses, subway cars and automobiles, is a "serious hazard" and should be banned from public transportation "in the immediate future," an unpublished fire safety study by the U.S. National Academy of Sciences warns.

The report, to be published next month, says that fire hazards posed by urethane — and to a lesser extent by other combustible plastics in school buses, public transit buses and subways — are severe enough to warrant withholding federal grants from municipal transit authorities unless their purchase orders for buses and subway cars specify safer materials.

Speaking generally of ground transportation in America, the report, written by a committee of 19 scientists, charges that both the fire safety and the service life of vehicles have been subordinated to esthetics and comfort. The scientists called for stricter fire safety requirements for all vehicles, including automobiles.

Although vehicle manufacturers have been accelerating their use of plastics "by leaps and bounds," transportation engineers and interior designers "are often without even rudimentary training" in the combustion behavior of the materials they recommend, the report says.

The 416-page transportation fire safety study is part of a much larger project that the National Academy of Sciences, in Washington, D.C., began in 1972 to examine the role of plastics and other synthetic materials in fires that claim between 8,000 to 10,000 lives annually in the United States.

Under the heading, "Matters for first attention," the transportation report recommends that the government not only prohibit urethane seating in public transportation but also help local transit authorities refurbish buses and subway cars with safer seating materials.

Neoprene, a form of synthetic rubber, is recommended.

"Polyurethane is almost an explosive," Dr. Herman F. Mark, chairman of the Academy's fire safety committee and a dean emeritus at the New York Polytechnic Institute, said in a telephone interview. "It's comfortable. But it develops such dense smoke, such toxic gases, that it is very dangerous."

In a series of articles earlier this year, the Los Angeles Times reported that industry and some government agencies have known about urethane's high flammability for years, but that little has been done to regulate its use in home furnishings and vehicles despite evidence implicating urethane in hundreds of fire deaths and thousands of injuries each year.

A leading industry group — the Society of the Plastics Industry, Inc., in New York — subsequently urged the federal government to set special flammability standards, where none now exist, governing plastic foams and other materials in "high risk" applications such as nursing homes and public transportation.

About 1.9 billion pounds of rigid and flexible urethane foam go annually into an immense variety of products from mattresses and upholstered furniture to the seats and padding in school buses. Vehicles — mostly cars — use 440 million pounds a year, with 1 million pounds of this employed in public transportation.

Urethane insulation and seating was the principal fuel in a major fire last January aboard a Bay Area Rapid Transit District train that killed one fireman and injured 56 other persons.

Although manufacturers of buses and other vehicles use a wide variety of plastics — synthetics now account for almost 100 per cent of the interior materials in automobiles — the Academy's transportation study singles out urethane as the most hazardous of all.

He's frothing at the mouth

CORTLAND, N.Y. (AP) — Despite some reluctance from police, Thomas South took his punishment and had his mouth washed out with soap for swearing at two policemen.

Authorities said today that the sentence was carried out Thursday afternoon in the washroom of the police station.

South was arrested early last month outside a tavern and charged with disorderly conduct after policemen Christopher Kabat and James Rice said the 20-year-old shouted obscenities at them.

South pleaded guilty Monday, and City Judge Lynn Dorset offered him the choice of 10 days in jail, a $50 fine or having his mouth washed out with soap. South chose the soap.

Initially, Kabat said he did not want to enforce the punishment.

"I doubt if I'm going to do it," Kabat said earlier this week. "I doubt if the other officer will, either. We don't want to be liable if the soap makes him sick."

But the policemen went ahead with the punishment, which Dorset says is an effective incentive for people to clean up their language. He says he offers the choice about once a month.

"I know my mother did it to me, and once was enough," he said. "I use it just if somebody bad mouths a police officer who really has no comeback."

Carter given boost

MIAMI (AP) — Jimmy Carter has some good news for a change.

Backers of a move to draft Senator Edward Kennedy as a presidential candidate have suffered a 3 to 1 loss in the Democratic caucuses in Dade County, Fla. — once considered a Kennedy stronghold.

Results released early today gave President Carter a 147-to-41 victory over the Massachusetts Democrat in balloting for delegates to the Florida Democratic convention in November.

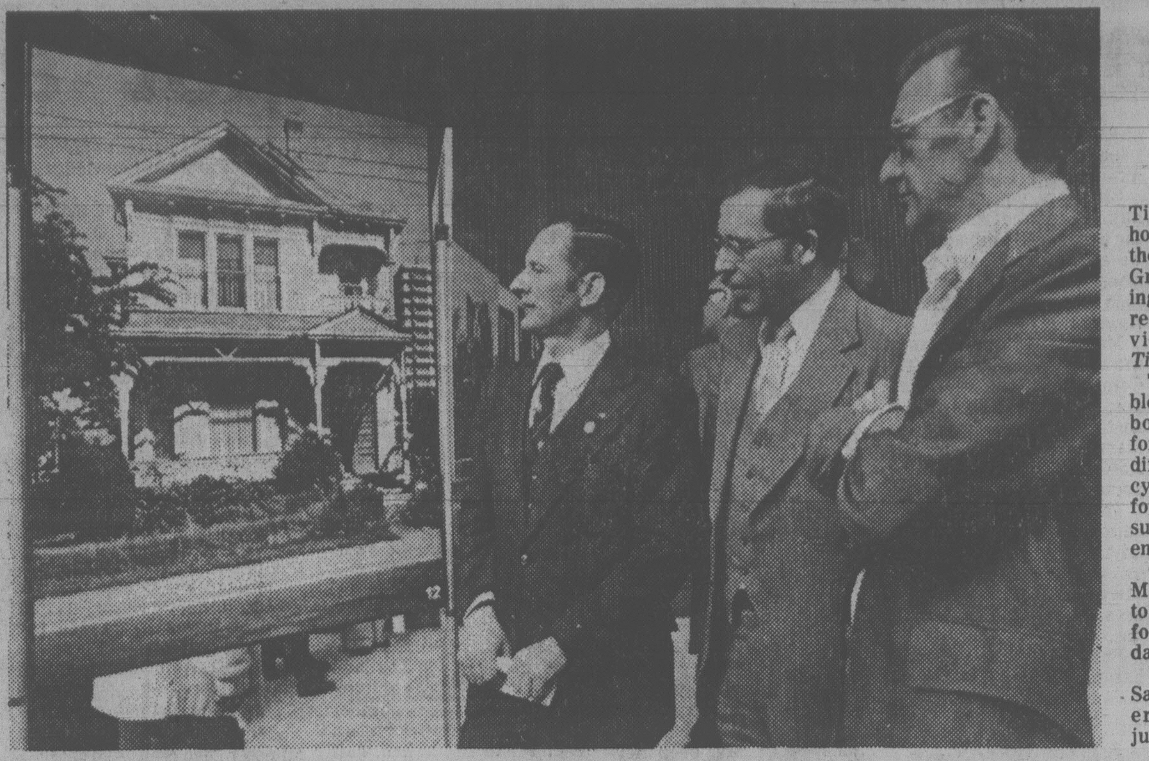
Meanwhile, an Associated Press-NBC news poll released Thursday says the president's popularity has strengthened a bit from its all-time lows.

The five-percentage-point rise in Carter's rating during a five-week period was the largest positive surge in his ratings since the 16-point jump that occurred after the Middle East summit conference at Camp David in September, 1978.

Times' unions get 3 days

LONDON (Reuter) — Talks aimed at ending a bitter labor dispute at The Times were to resume following management's decision to give unions three more days to reach agreement.

Times Newspapers had said previously that if a settlement was not reached in its year-long argument over manning, new technology and wildcat strikes, The Times, Sunday Times and three supplements would be shut down today.



PHOTOGRAPHIC EXHIBITION showing renovation and restoration techniques for heritage buildings was opened Thursday by Mayor Mike Young, left, Assistant Deputy Minister for government services Alan Turner and architectural photographer Phillip Graham. Exhibit, prepared by Graham, illustrates practical side of restoring heritage buildings and will go on tour throughout the province.

More workers laid off to pare vehicle stocks

DETROIT (AP) — Two auto-makers will lay off more than 15,000 workers for one or two weeks starting Monday, mainly to reduce inventories of cars and trucks, the companies said Thursday.

General Motors Corp. said it will stop van production at the GMC Truck Coach plant in Pontiac, Mich., with furloughs for 1,800.

Ford Motor Co. said it is closing seven assembly plants, one of them because of a strike at a supplier plant.

In addition, Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. announced Thursday a two-week layoff for 3,100 workers at its Oakville, Ont., assembly plant starting Oct. 29 because of a heavy inventory of unsold cars.

The plant makes the family-sized LTD models and Econoline vans.

The companies said their indefinite layoffs in the U.S. now totalled about 89,000 — 33,000 at GM, 26,000 at Ford, 29,000 at Chrysler Corp. and 1,200 at American Motors Corp. In all, the U.S. industry employs about 780,000 production workers.

Meanwgile, in Highland Park, Mich., Douglas Fraser, president of the United Auto Workers union, accused Chrysler Corp. Thursday of failing to bargain in good faith on Canadian issues and warned of possible local strikes.

He was speaking to reporters on his returning from a visit with officials of Canadian locals.

One arm saved

NORWICH, N.Y. (AP) — Surgeons reattached the left arm of a seven-year-old girl who lost both arms in a farm accident, but they were unable to rejoin her right arm.

Tracy Vroman, of suburban North Norwich, was in critical condition today. A hospital spokesman said the girl's left arm had been reattached eight centimetres below her shoulder. He had no immediate explanation of the failure to rejoin the right arm.

The child also suffered a broken back.

The girl was standing near a wagon unloader being operated by her father, Fred, when her clothing became entangled in a power-takeoff shaft and she was pulled into the machinery.

Laetrile autopsy foiled?

SAN DIEGO (LAT) — A Tijuana, Mexico, funeral home mistakenly embalmed the body of 3-year-old Chad Green shortly before learning that an autopsy had been requested on the leukemia victim, The Los Angeles Times learned Thursday.

The embalming, in which blood is drained from the body and replaced with formaldehyde, could make it difficult to detect whether cyanide, a toxic substance found in the cancer-treating substance laetrile, was present in the body.

Chad, whose parents fled Massachusetts last January to obtain laetrile treatments for him in Tijuana, died Friday.

The embalming occurred Saturday morning at Funeraria del Carmen, a Tijuana mortuary.

Today's more potent 'pot' a new ball game?

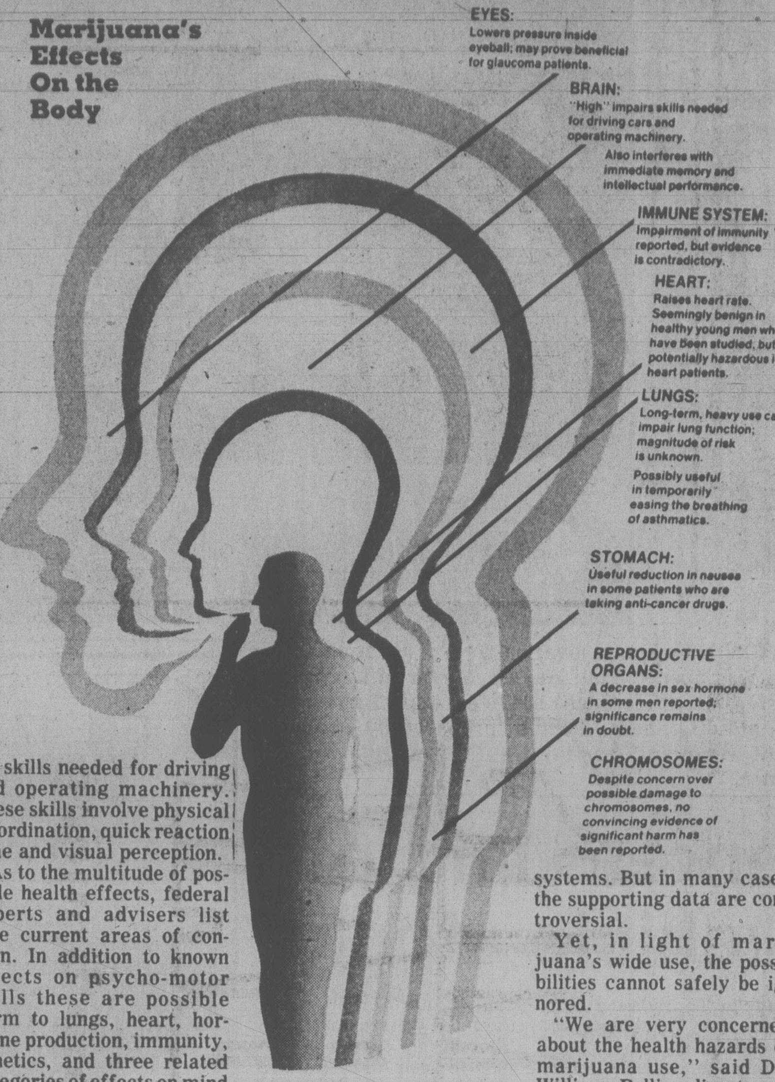
By HAROLD SCHMECK Jr.
New York Times

NEW YORK — More potent types of marijuana and alarmingly greater use among young teenagers require a new attitude of concern toward the substance, some experts believe.

"The rules of the game have been changed," said Dr. Sidney Cohen of the University of California at Los Angeles, former head of Federal drug abuse research.

Imported marijuana used today is often 10 times as potent as the domestic "pot" smoked a few years ago, he said. Many Americans use it more heavily and the age at which use begins is dropping toward 12 to 14 years. At this formative age, dependence on any powerful substance — alcohol, tobacco, even coffee — is viewed with concern by health experts.

More than 43 million Americans have tried marijuana, according to the latest surveys, and almost half that number may be regular users.



Marijuana's Effects On the Body

EYES:
Lowers pressure inside eyeball; may prove beneficial for glaucoma patients.
BRAIN:
"High" impairs skills needed for driving cars and operating machinery.
Also interferes with immediate memory and intellectual performance.
IMMUNE SYSTEM:
Impairment of immunity reported, but evidence is contradictory.
HEART:
Raises heart rate. Seemingly benign in healthy young men who have been studied, but potentially hazardous in heart patients.
LUNGS:
Long-term, heavy use can impair lung function; magnitude of risk is unknown.
Possibly useful in temporarily easing the breathing of asthmatics.
STOMACH:
Useful reduction in nausea in some patients who are taking anti-cancer drugs.
REPRODUCTIVE ORGANS:
A decrease in sex hormone in some men reported; significance remains in doubt.
CHROMOSOMES:
Despite concern over possible damage to chromosomes, no convincing evidence of significant harm has been reported.

Research over the past several years has suggested that marijuana has deleterious effects on vital bodily functions. And new findings continue to hint of marijuana's effects on the body. But the evidence remains inconclusive and, in any case, most researchers agree that moderate, occasional smoking is probably no significant hazard to physically and mentally healthy adults who are not pregnant.

There is also accumulating evidence that marijuana has potential medical uses. Foremost among these are reduction of excessive eye pressure in glaucoma and lessening of the nausea caused by powerful anti-cancer drugs. There are also suggestions that one or another ingredient in marijuana might be useful as a muscle relaxant.

Clearly, however, there are powerful and complex immediate effects. The most obvious is the psychological "high" for which marijuana has been famous for 4,000 years. It also raises heart rate, distorts perceptions and hampers the psychomotor skills needed for driving and operating machinery. These skills involve physical co-ordination, quick reaction time and visual perception.

As to the multitude of possible health effects, federal experts and advisers list nine current areas of concern. In addition to known effects on psycho-motor skills these are possible harm to lungs, heart, hormone production, immunity, genetics, and three related categories of effects on mind and brain.

The list itself shows the complexity of marijuana and its potential effects as well as the often contradictory results of research.

In this family of chemicals called cannabinoids, the one principallly involved in the "high" is delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol. It is known as THC. Scientists who have studied marijuana say the chemicals are a potent but elusive class apart from other substances known to affect brain and other body systems.

Recently several key scientists and others of widely disparate views have reached a consensus that some groups should definitely avoid the drug in the light of the research findings. Among those groups are persons in the middle teens and younger, heart patients, pregnant women, persons with lung disease and anyone who appears prone to emotional disturbances. It was also agreed that driving an auto after smoking marijuana can be hazardous.

The very fact that a long list of possible effects of marijuana on the body can be drawn may distort public perception of the facts by implying that there is in fact damage to all these vital systems. But in many cases the supporting data are controversial.

Yet, in light of marijuana's wide use, the possibilities cannot safely be ignored.

"We are very concerned about the health hazards of marijuana use," said Dr. William Pollin, director of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, in testimony before the House Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control.

He listed the major areas of concern, giving the government's current appraisal of the state of knowledge on each.

For instance, he pointed out, virtually all studies of performance while "high" support the view that marijuana interferes with immediate memory and such intellectual necessities as reading comprehension, arithmetic problem-solving and thinking in general, he said.

Similarly there is agreement concerning the ill effects on driving ability.

The evidence is also considered strong that heart rate increases under the influence of marijuana. This danger has made possible the emerging consensus that marijuana is unsafe for heart patients.

Most American users of marijuana take it by smoking. The grim conclusions concerning tobacco smoking over the past several decades have raised similar fears of lung damage and perhaps cancer from marijuana. As with tobacco there are potentially cancer-causing chemicals in the "tar."

Paradoxically some research has suggested marijuana may be useful in short-term treatment of an important breathing problem — asthma, because the drug acts as a dilator of small airway passages. Some believe, however that the smoke's long-term irritating effects would probbly cancel out that possible benefit.

There has been evidence, from research in humans and animals, that marijuana may have harmful effects on the immunological defence system, but the practical implications of this remain in doubt.

Noting that there have been reports of damage to chromosomes, the Federal monograph said there is "no convincing evidence" that these are significnt for human health "although the possibility cannot be completely dismissed."

Effects on hormone production, including the male sex hormone testosterone, have also been reported.

"For those who want to worry, there is a lot more to worry about there," said Jones. "The animal data are just overwhelming that there are various endocrine abnormalities." His group's work at the University of California shows decreases in human testosterone, but these decreases still left the levels within the normal range.

Nahas of Columbia says marijuana's active ingredients affect the hypothalamus of the brain and, through this action, can have effects on the pituitary gland and many of the hormones that affect development and reproductive functions. He believes the evidence grows continually stronger.

But in this area of study, too, many experts contend, the true significance for human health remains unproven and better understanding is needed urgently.

Motorists facing blood tests

Crash drivers dodging drink charges

Attorney-General Garde Gardom has proposed mandatory blood testing of drivers injured and suspected of drinking in motor vehicle accidents.

Many impaired drivers are escaping prosecution because they are first taken to hospital for treatment of their injuries and the two-hour legal limit for taking a breathalyzer test goes by, he said.

Police and leaders of the legal profession generally welcomed this new attack on impaired driving, although a spokesman for the B.C. Civil Liberties Association opposed mandatory tests.

Gardom told a drinking driving conference in Vancouver Thursday that a recent study of traffic accident victims taken to hospital revealed the "surprising and alarming" fact that only one in six impaired drivers were subsequently charged.

"An injury in a traffic accident, especially a minor injury, should not be a reason for a drinking driver to escape criminal charges," said Gardom.

"I am asking officials in the ministry to look into mandatory blood testing of drivers involved in traffic accidents where the testing wouldn't interfere with medical treatment."

The attorney-general also said serious consideration is being given to lowering the impaired limit to .05 per cent.

"It's something we're contemplating proclaiming in the not too distant future."

The .05 per cent level would limit most people to only one ortwo drinks.

Gardom said his ministry also is reconsidering the present system of fines for impaired driving, which can be "crippling" to someone in a low income class but of little consequence to a wealthy person.

And roadside impairment checks will no longer aim at the Christmas season, but will be province wide and year long.

About 25 per cent of drivers in the Royal Columbian study had blood alcohol readings above .08 per cent.

It also turned up the suprising information that 37 per cent of cyclists brought in for treatment after traffic accidents had been drinking, as were 21 per cent of the pedestrians.

The proposal to change the laws will be considered by officials in the A-G's department, said Gardom, along with the the legal ramifications.

Evan Atkinson, assistant to Gardom, said the proposal involves questions of invasion of privacy and the government is going to move carefully.

"There's nothing like this in North America," he said. "We'll be going carefully."

Officials of the B.C. Civil Liberties Spokesman could not be reached for comment, but a spokesman at the Vancouver office said the board had discussed the proposal in detail previously and had decided that mandatory blood tests constituted assault.

Central Saanich Police Chief Bob Miles said that almost any method which can be used against impaired driving is worthwhile.

He said he knows of numerous occasions in Central Saanich where people involved in traffic accidents escaped charges for impaired driving because they had been taken to hospital for treatment and couldn't submit to a breathalyzer test. They refused, as is now their right, to give a blood sample.

Jury raps MD, Glendale staff and abortion 'rubber-stamp'

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A coroner's jury today found the staff of Glendale Lodge was remiss in not detecting the pregnancy of a seriously mentally retarded woman — a patient in the home — sooner than they did.

The jury, in handing down its verdict at the conclusion of a nine-day inquest before B.C.'s chief coroner Dr. William McArthur, also said Vancouver pediatrician Dr. C. K. Chan was remiss in not familiarizing himself with the case before an operation was carried out to terminate the pregnancy.

The inquest was called to inquire into the death of an infant boy who died in Victoria General Hospital on Sept. 19, 1978, 10 hours after he was born by Caesarian section to the retarded woman. The infant was delivered in its 23rd week of gestation.

The jury said the baby died by misadventure and attributed the cause to hyalin membrane disease.

It said the baby's prematurity was a contributing factor and that the prematurity was caused by the operation, a historotomy, which in turn was caused by doctors' consideration for the mother's health.

The jury said that although the Glendale staff was remiss in not detecting the pregnancy sooner, they should be commended for their programs and patient care.

The jury noted the society operates without delegated authority or proper definitions of its responsibilities for the care of retarded persons.

The jury also found the joint Victoria General-Royal Jubilee hospitals therapeutic abortion committee has insufficient time to review applications and because of that, is "reduced to a committee that acts as a rubber stamp."

The three women and two men on the jury found that the committee has no clear guidelines to follow and fails to give consideration to the fetus in cases that come before it.

The jury found that the VGH's quality assessment committee should have been more aware of the procedures followed in the case as it was an unusual occurrence.

The jury found the hospital's intensive care unit had done eveything it could to keep the baby alive.

The jury members said that Glendale medical director Dr. John Kenneth Martin, while acting in the best interests of the pregnancy woman, failed to get sufficient independent consultation before recommending termination of pregnancy.

They noted Dr. John Dickout, Glendale staff doctor, had supported the decision and said that Dr. Michael Penn, the retarded woman's family physician, was the only doctor who thoroughly examined the woman.

The jury found that Dr. Michael Rippington, the obstetrician who performed

25 die, wide damage as typhoon rips Japan

TOKYO (AP) — The strongest typhoon to hit the main Japanese island of Honshu in 13 years has left 25 persons dead, 13 missing, more than 200 others injured and caused widespread destruction, authorities said today.

They said Thursday's typhoon ruined 44 houses, damaged 94 others and flooded more than 19,000. It also washed out 550 roads, knocked out 45 bridges and 105 dikes, and caused 587 landslides.

After cutting a trail across central and eastern Japan at about 95 kilometres an hour, the storm continued north, weathermen said. By nightfall it had barreled past Kushiro, Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island and then roared out into the northwest Pacific Ocean.

The typhoon also caused five ships to sink in heavy seas off the coast and 50-storey buildings to sway in the capital.

Up to 20 centimetres of rain fell in Kii Peninsula, in south-central Japan.

Many office workers were sent home early in the day as the storm moved into the Tokyo area. As the afternoon rush hour approached, hundreds of commuter trains and subways remained stalled.

SC letter investigation expands to Vancouver

A police investigation in Victoria into a letter-forging scandal that has embarrassed the Social Credit party will be expanded as a result of information received Thursday by the attorney-general's department.

Neil McDiarmid, associate deputy attorney-general, said he will ask Vancouver city police to find out whether a letter printed last Aug. 20 in the Vancouver Sun was forged.

The letter, attacking then human rights branch director Kathleen Ruff and allegedly signed by Jane Hudson, associate professor of rehabilitation medicine at the University of B.C., led to an apology three days later after Hudson complained she was not the author.

"It looks like we'll have to investigate," McDiarmid said. "There's very little else we can do."

The decision to investigate the Hudson letter came after Victoria city police launche a probe into a forged letter sent to the Colonist last March.

That letter resulted in apologies to Gordon Townsend, a well-known local NDP supporter.

The letters criticized the performance of former NDP human resources minister Norm Levi.

A team of city detectives began their investigation Thursday with a visit to the Colonist, where they interviewed editorial staff about the Townsend letter.

The controversy arose in September when it was discovered at least two Social Credit party researchers had counselled party supporters to use other people's or altered names on letters to newspaper editors.

Gas pricing inquiry eyed?

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark would not comment today on a published report that the government is ready to begin a legal inquiry into pricing policies and competition practices of the country's four oil giants and 10 other petroleum companies.

Clark's statement follows on the heels of a U.S. government announcement that it had charged four major oil companies Thursday with pricing irregularities involving nearly $100 million following the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo.

In a copyright story today, the Toronto Star said it had learned that the justice ministry, acting on data gathered since 1973 by the combines investigation branch, is hiring lawyers to prepare the government's case.

One senior source in the consumer affairs ministry told The Star that "(the ministry of) justice is at the charging stage" in an investigation that involves everything from the price of gasoline at the pump during the last six years to prices charged to private gas companies.

He said the combines branch — now called the bureau of competition policy — has turned over "rooms full of evidence" to the justice ministry.

In Halifax, former Liberal cabinet minister Marc Lalonde said there is an indication of "implicit if not overt" price-fixing by major oil companies in evidence gathered by the federal combines authorities.

Lalonde, speaking at Dalhousie University, said that an inquiry into possible price-fixing had been in progress for several years and a report is expected by federal officials next year.

In the meantime, he told a questioner, he would comment no further upon the findings of the inquiry.

Today's Star story reported that other sources had said the investigation could easily become the largest series of court cases in Canadian history and would, for the first time, reveal how the oil giants — Imperial, Texaco, Shell and Gulf — set gas prices.

No pipe without probe: PM

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Clark and Environment Minister John Fraser promised today that no West-Coast oil-transport system under Canadian jurisdiction will be approved without adequate environmental studies.

Their pledge in the Commons came a day after the National Energy Board ruled in a Vancouver hearing that TransMountain Pipe Line Ltd. does not have to provide a detailed environmental impact study on its proposal to move Alaskan oil to the U.S. Midwest.

The two ministers were replying to Jim Fulton (NDP-Skeena), who declared that proposed oil tanker traffic on the West Coast poses a major environmental hazard.

The TransMountain proposal involves shipping Alaskan oil by tanker to the state of Washington, then piping it to Edmonton into existing pipeline systems for delivery to the U.S. Midwest.

U.S. officials, however, have declared their support for the Northern Tier proposal, which would also use tankers to Washington but which would then pipe the oil through an all-American line eastward.

U.S. Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus reaffirmed today that whether the Northern Tier route was the one chosen was up to private financiers, not the U.S. government.

Andrus also said that if Northern Tier couldn't come up with financing in a year, the $600 million Canadian pipeline proposal by Trans Mountain Pipeline Co. should be given federal support.

While the Northern Tier plan would involve more tanker traffic in congested waters, Ottawa has criticized both tanker-oriented systems, endorsing instead the Foothills plan to move Alaskan oil south by pipeline, without using tankers.

Referring to U.S. government and Congress unwillingness to comply with Canadian preferences, Fulton charged "the U.S. Congress is attempting to dictate oil-transportation policy in this country."

Clark, however, rejected Fulton's call for a special study group to report on West Coast tanker traffic before President Carter's Ottawa visit next month. There would not be enought time for such an inquiry, Clark said.

Meanwhile, opposition

New York

A new selloff sent stock prices into a broad decline today amid fears that the Federal Reserve Board would clamp down still harder on credit.

The 2 p.m. Dow Jones average of 30 industrials was off 11.35 at 818.77.

Late Thursday the Federal Reserve Board reported an unexpectedly large $2.8 billion jump in the basic measure of the money supply for the week ended Oct. 10.

Midway through that week, the Federal Reserve announced that it would seek to restrain inflation by direct measures to curb the expansion of the money supply.

Even though it was too early to expect to see results from the new strategy, the statistics released Thursday came as a disappointment to many observers.

London

The London stock market fell moderately near the close of trading today.

The Financial Times index was down 1.6 to 468.5.

Industrials declined but oils and banks advanced.

Canadian shares eased.

Reuben Metson, who earned $4.25 an hour working in a Michigan factory, isn't a family man. In fact, he hasn't seen his relatives in 22 years. But he has been declared the heir to $189,000.

"I'm going to have one, and one shot only, of a celebration," Metson, 47, said after he proved to a San Francisco judge that he was a long-lost heir to the estate of his great-aunt. "I've had all kinds of life experiences," he said. "And I'm not going to become any of that nouveau riche stuff now."

Bianca Jagger will have to divorce rock star Mick Jagger in England, not California, where she hoped to get a bigger settlement. London's Court of Appeal denied her request to move the proceedings to the U.S. The Nicaraguan-born Mrs. Jagger had wanted the case heard in Los Angeles Superior Court. Her U.S. lawyer, Marvin Mitchelson, had said she hoped for a settlement of several million dollars there. By contrast, her British lawyer, Robert Johnson, told the London court that in Britain the highest award of maintenance by a judge is just over $1 million.

Actress Maureen Stapleton could lose her tavern if she doesn't start paying the tax bill. Stapleton, a Troy native, owes the city $3,531.39 in back taxes on the Albia Tavern for three years beginning in 1976, city records show. The city also says the actress owes $1,500 for 1979.

They've already turned down one request, but folksinger Joan Baez says she will approach the Beatles, as "personal friends," to do a charity concert for Indochinese refugees. Baez, on tour in Southeast Asia to dramatize the plight of the refugees, said Wednesday the Beatles were her first choice for the cause.

Off-duty New York policeman James Mantello didn't think the foot-high painting of a nude woman on the side of Michael McCloskey's van qualified as art. Neither did a nearby woman who thought it "disgusting" and asked the officer to do something about it. He did. McCloskey now faces a charge of displaying offensive sexual material.

Guru Maharaj Ji, known to his followers as "God on Earth," has vanished from the Palm Island estate and his palatial mansion is now on the rental market.

abby

Dear Abby:

I'm a man, over 70. My wife died suddenly several months ago, and I found out that I just couldn't get along without female companionship.

As a young man I suppose I had the usual number of girlfriends, but I haven't courted for 50 years, and am rather rusty.

I recently asked a woman in my age group to accompany me to a variety of social engagements. She was most agreeable. She turned out to be a warm, lively, affectionate companion, and I must admit that I am crazy about her!

The problem: Her kisses. Abby, this woman's kisses shake me from top to toe. I don't know why. I hate to call it 'technique' or suggest that she has developed her kissing purposely, but she must be conscious of the effect her kissing has on males. She is loving, but I am glad that not all women kiss the way she does. There must be a happy medium.

Overwhelmed

Dear Over:

Are you complaining? While kissing is basically natural, techniques are developed. This woman is giving you a message. She's probably crazy about you, too, so don't dismiss it as a routine 'tongue-in-cheek' matter.

Dear Abby:

Asking in Alaska says, 'Kids who live together before marriage don't deserve wedding presents, so they shouldn't be sent any.' And you replied, 'It won't work. Most parents (and relatives) are so glad that the kids finally made it legal, they send gifts anyway.'

Well, here's how I handle it: Out of respect to the parents, I send a gift. I buy the first low-priced, ugly, useless piece of junk I see, have it gift-wrapped and sent.

I figure the gift is as appropriate as the wedding. And if Mr. and Mrs. Sleazy Morals have any perception at all, they will get the message.

Realistic

Dear Realistic:

Since you send a gift 'out of respect to the parents,' how much respect do you think a 'low-priced, ugly, useless piece of junk' will convey?

You'd be ahead to save your time, money and 'respect,' and send nothing.

Dear Abby:

Regarding the letter about the man marrying a girl who was six months pregnant with another man's child: that's my son you are talking about.

Her brother-in-law took advantage of her. My son went ahead and married her, advancing the wedding date so he could take care of her.

That child will be treated exactly like all my other grandchildren!

Proud Grandpa

Dear Grandpa:

Congratulations — for more reasons than one.

Feeding child, not emotions

By JANE BRODY
New York Times

At a family potluck party, the parents watched with pride as their 10-year-old son chose one slice of ham, one slice of cheese, an assortment of fresh vegetables, rice pudding, a plain roll, melon and grapes. Among the items he bypassed were pastries, potato chips and fruit-flavored gelatin with whipped cream. Before eating the ham, he carefully trimmed off the fat and pushed it aside.

"We must be doing something right," the father remarked. "All the other kids dove right into the cake and chips and dessert and ignored the fruit and salad."

Millions of food-conscious parents who want to get their children off to a good nutritional start face this problem: How do you get your children to eat what's good for them when peer pressures, television advertising, supermarket displays and street-corner temptations do everything they can to thwart you?

There is no one correct way. Everyone who's had a modicum of success as a parent has his or her own gimmicks. But certain basic principles apply across the board.

First, as a parent, you should know just what your child needs to be well nourished. In most cases, it's less food than you might think. Many childhood eating problems begin soon after the first birthday, when the child's growth and appetite suddenly fall off.

The average child increases his weight 300 percent in the first year of life, but only 22 per cent in the second, and by the fifth, it's down to 12 per cent a year. If your child continued to eat at the same rate as during infancy, he'd grow up to weigh about 300 pounds.

But anxious parents, thinking 18-month-old Jennifer must be starving because she ate no lunch and had only milk for supper, try all sorts of tricks, threats and bribes to get her to eat more.

These gimmicks endow food and eating with emotional values that may then supersede nutritional considerations. A child who must eat her green beans if she's to get her dessert will come to value dessert as the most important part of her meal.

Similarly, food should not be used as a pacifier (for example, offering cookies to distract a child who's scraped his knee) or as a reward for good behavior, nor should it be withheld as a punishment. This can lay the foundation for overweight in later life caused by eating for emotional reasons, rather than primarily to satisfy a physical need for food.

At the same time that a baby's growth slows, independence grows. The baby who used to like everything suddenly refuses everything green, or won't eat meat, or eats something eagerly one week, then refuses it the next. It's the unusual child who doesn't try to assert his independence and growing sense of taste by eating only what he wants.

JESSA COX of Victoria is a three-year-old who doesn't eat much, but what she does eat is mostly good stuff, says her mother Janet. Jessa likes yogurt, fruit, is not much of a meat eater and would rather eat crackers than cookies. Her mom says her daughter is not influenced by aggressive junk food marketing practices — she simple follows the eating examples of the adults around her.

If he won't eat vegetables, give him more fruits to make up for the vitamins and minerals he may miss in his vegetables. Better yet, try crisp raw vegetables — carrots, celery, tomatoes, cucumbers, even sweet peppers. Most young children prefer them to cooked vegetables. Or you can sneak extra vegetables into the soup, stew or meat loaf.

If the child's physician is satisfied with his growth rate, don't worry about how little you think he's eating. A child who is offered meals that are reasonably well balanced is unlikely to develop nutritional deficiencies. During the course of a week, he'll probably eat enough of what he needs, even though the day-to-day intake may seem erratic.

However, per pound of body weight, a child needs more nutrients than an adult. If a child is given too many high-calorie foods that are low in all nutrients but sugar — soft drinks, cookies, cake, candy and the like — he may quickly fulfill his caloric needs without consuming enough of the essentials.

How, then, do you keep Johnny away from the junk food and get him interested in what he needs to grow on? You might try some of the following tips.

Set a good example. Children learn primarily by watching and emulating their parents' behavior. Don't expect your child to do otherwise if he sees you munching potato chips or devouring a box of cookies. And if you eat haphazardly, perhaps skipping breakfast and eating lunch on the run, you may have a hard time convincing your children to sit down to three meals a day.

Don't keep junk food in the house. Many people justify their regular purchases of soft drinks, cookies and ice cream by buying them "for the children." Then they are dismayed to watch the children eat them, often in preference to carefully prepared meals.

These foods can certainly be bought on occasion. Or, if you prefer to have them on hand at all times, control the rate and time at which they are consumed. Instead of putting the box of cookies on the table, serve the child two cookies and make it known that that's all he'll get.

Keep healthy substitutes handy. Stock your refrigerator with unsweetened fruit juices, fresh fruit (it may be expensive in the winter, but so are cookies year round), unsalted nuts, cut-up raw vegetables. Make your own dip for raw vegetables using yogurt, cottage cheese, herbs and spices. Children love the ritual of dipping and eating. Serve popcorn, preferably without butter, in place of chips.

If your young child refuses to eat a sandwich on anything but white bread, it's not worth making an issue over it. But try a whole grain bread now and again, since chances are he'll come to prefer it eventually.

Make your own nutritious treats. Let's face it, most children adore sweets. If you make your own cookies and cakes, you can control the amount of sweeteners and the type of fats used. Try healthy, minimally sweet muffins or quick breads containing fruits, nuts, whole grains and polyunsaturated vegetable oil or margarine. If the children help you make them, they'll be almost certain to want to eat them too.

You determine the after-school snack. Too often, children come home from school famished and proceed to eat junk all afternoon, spoiling their appetite for supper.

Decide on the snack ahead of time — for example, two cookies and milk, milk pudding, cheese and crackers, fruit and cheese, half a sandwich and juice — and serve it right after school. Then, no more food until supper. If the child is thirsty an hour before supper, offer water.

Counter propaganda with facts. It may seem pointless to present nutritional arguments to a 3-year-old who's clamoring for the latest in sugar-coated cereals. But in fact, it pays to start as early in life as possible telling your child what's good for him and why, not as a lecture or punishment but as simple, loving facts: "I want you to grow up with healthy teeth. That's why I don't let you eat candy whenever you want it." "I want you to have strong bones. That's why I give you milk instead of soda."

As the child gets older, you can elaborate on your explanations so that the connection between good eating and good health is better understood. When your children start watching commercial television, point out the sales pitch behind each sponsor's message.

Chances are it won't be long before they take up the game themselves and soon stop asking for things they see advertised on television.

Show them you really mean it. If you tell a schoolchild he must have a decent breakfast (which he should if he's going to be good-natured and able to concentrate through the morning), get yourself and the child up early enough so that there's ample time to prepare and consume a good breakfast.

If you say no to a request for some junk food item, don't capitulate when the child starts screaming in the store. And don't let other relatives subvert your nutritional goals by giving the child forbidden foods behind your back.

Start them young preparing foods. A 5-year-old can be taught to make the dinner salad, and he might even be more interested in eating it as a result. Young children can also help prepare things like meatballs, stuffing and bread. There are many cookbooks available for children of all ages and levels of ability. Select one that doesn't emphasize snacks and desserts.

Or, if you think the best way to get your child interested in cooking is through snacks, try a cookbook that has recipes for healthy snacks, such as "Love at First Bite," by Jane Cooper and Sherry Streeter (Knopf, $3.50).

Impotent need enlightened support

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

I've been married for six years. We have one child who is 3 years old. In the past year and a half, I have become impotent. I don't know where to turn. My wife thinks the whole problem is because I'm under terrible stress in my business. Is such a problem always psychological?

Mr. T.O.

Dear Mr. O.:

Many people, younger and older than you, mistakenly believe that there is a shame or stigma attached to impotence. Consequently, they will go on for years before devoting their energies to finding the basic causes and making an effort to eliminate them.

Because the psychological implication of impotence is constantly being emphasized and overemphasized, along with the feeling of inadequacy, guilt and embarrassment, the problem becomes magnified.

You do, indeed, have someone to turn to. Your family physician regards impotence as a problem that is no different from a broken leg, pneumonia, or an attack of appendicitis. Confidentiality is the essence of a a doctor-patient relationship, no matter what the character or severity of an illness is. Your guide, therefore, to the solution of your problem is your doctor. Open, mature conversation may pinpoint the reason for your impotence or establish leads to be followed by specialists.

There was a time when the traditional attitude toward impotence was that it was purely psychological in origin. This has been proven to be not always true. In fact, new approaches to the problem of male impotence indicate that only about 25 per cent of the cases of this male sexual disorder can be attributed to psychological reasons.

Today, there is greater concentration on underlying physical factors that can account for this problem. New tests have been devised for accurately measuring the arterial flow of blood to the penis. This becomes a valuable aid in determining some forms of impotence. Accurate studies of the blood for the presence of testosterone, the male sex hormone, can determine deficiencies if they are present. Neurological and urological consultations can be of enormous value in pinpointing causes of impotence.

The problem now is studied by the co-ordinated efforts of the family physician, the psychiatrist, the psychologist, the urologist, the neurologist and even by surgeons. Psychological support and drugs have been remarkably effective.

You have taken the first giant step. With the support of your wife, you are now in the ideal position to pursue the problem and conquer it.

Music's story traced by CBC

Music bridges the gap not only between cultures and nations, but between the centuries. The man who first blew into a hollow bone has something in common wth today's rock musician. Both are making their own kind of music.

In a series of eight one-hour programs, The Music of Man, the CBC has set out to explore mankind's musical heritage.

Episode one, The Quiver of Life, examins the begining of man's awareness of sound on channels 2 and 6 Wednesday at 9 p.m.

Yehudi Menuhin, one of the most recorded artists in music history and a man who is as well-known as a humanitarian as for his masteful playing of the violin, is the narrator of this series.

"Music is the ultimate in human communication," Menuhin said when the program was announced, "and this television series has afforded me a rare opportunity to communicate with a vast audience, not only through music, but in ideas and words about music through the ages.

"We can all learn something here about our civilization and ourselves."

Five years in the making, the Music of Man was filmed on location in Canada, the U.S., Trinidad, Jamaica, England, France. Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Greece, Spain and Senegal.

It traces music from man's first awareness of sound to the present day.

Artists taking part in the series include Murray Schafer, Paul Horn, Ravi Shankar, Maureen Forrester, Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn, Oscar Peterson, Glenn Gould, Judy Collins, and members of The Beatles.

Curtis Davis, the composer and writer, produced the program over the past five years and simultaneously co-authored a book of the same title with Menuhin. The illustrated book will be published later this month.

YEHUDI MENUHIN examins a "soundscape" Canadian composer Murray Schafer has designed in an Ontario barn in Episode I of The Music of Man, being aired Wednesday on 2 and 6 at 9 p.m.

The pumpkin returns

A Peanut went bananas over a pumpkin several days before Halloween in 1966. Since then, children all over the world are temporarily bewitched by that same mysterious jack-o'-lantern as the end of October approaches.

The Peanut was, of course, Linus, the blanket-toting, philosophy-spouting member of Charles M. Schulz's famous little cartoon clan. And the pumpkin legend began when he first took up his post in the Peanutland pumpkin patch to await an elusive magical jack-o'-lantern that he believed would appear, with Halloween treats, to all the good little children in the world.

The spectre is not just any pumpkin. "It's the Great Pumpkin, Charlie Brown," as Linus explains to his disbelieving but emphatic chum in the Emmy Award-nominated animated special of that title.

And it's back again Monday evening, on Channel 7 at 8 p.m.

Wednesday evening, Oct. 24

FLIPPED — I haven't seen Flip Wilson in ages. Has he been barred from TV or something? — R.M., Canton, Ohio.

Fear not. Flip's set to star in a series pilot that should be a mid-season replacement on NBC. It's called "The Cheap Detective."

SIBLINGS — I would like to know if Stanley Livingston (Chip) and Barry Livingston (Ernie on "My Three Sons") are related.

The Livingstons are brothers and have both matured considerably since they played Chip and Ernie.

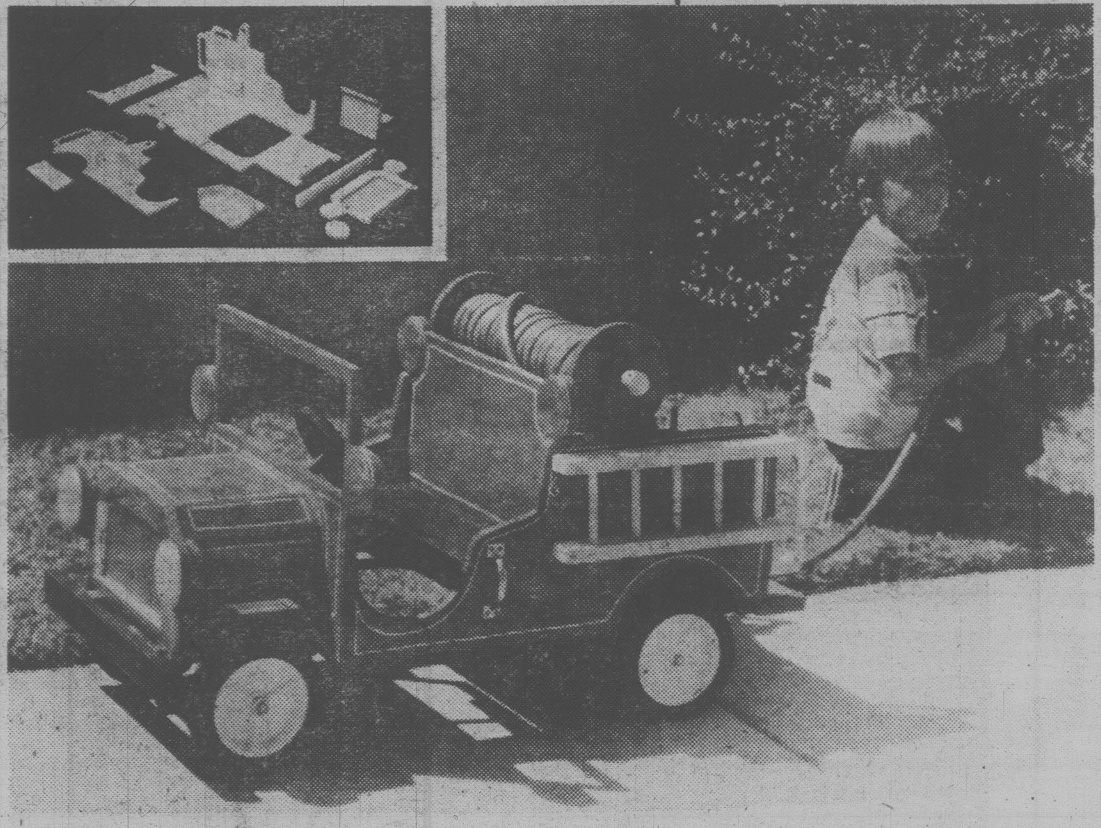
YOU CAN MAKE IT!

Send for plans to make a fire truck for Christmas

Made of plywood, it uses wheels you may already have around



By
ELLINGSON

Follow this firetruck ... pattern, that is. Just trace all the key parts onto plywood, cut out and assemble. Then paint it (with all your heart) and give it (with all your love) to some lucky child.

You start out with a 4'x8' plus a 2'x2' sheet of exterior plywood. Then follow our pattern sheet for traceable parts. The rear and front seats, hood, headlights, emergency lights, taillights, fenders, steering wheel and axle supports are cut from the same material.

Then you need such miscellaneous items as wheels (lawnmower wheels do just fine). Add some steel rod, bolts, nuts, washers, cotter pins and PVC pipe. The final touches are the reel of rubber hose and ladder for fighting every imaginable fire.

To obtain the Antique Fire Truck pattern No. 634 send $3.50 (please add fifty cents extra for postage and handling) by cheque or money order to:

Pattern Dept.,
Box 160, Cote St. Luc,
Montreal, Quebec.

Energy saving hints

The energy crisis has made us all conscious of ways to conserve for more reasons than one. Here are suggestions by energy experts for cutting back on that water bill:

You use 25 gallons of water each time your dishwasher goes through a cycle . . . use it only for full loads.

In the case of your automatic washer, figure on 30 to 35 gallons a cycle.

Check your toilet for leaks — you may be wasting more than 100 gallons of water a day!

Take a bath instead of a shower. If you must shower, limit yourself to the time it takes to soap up, wash down and rinse off.

Water your lawn only when it needs watering. When you do water, deep-soak it, don't lightly sprinkle.

Don't water on windy days.

ARCHITECTS ANSWER

You ask about tennis bubbles

By Terence J. Williams

QUESTION:
In the last few years, I have read in magazines and noticed in the city, new building types such as air inflated "bubbles" for tennis, and tents similar to those used during the Munich Olympic Games. Are we entering a new era of building design?

ANSWER:

Tents and "bubbles" have become quite extensively used in recent years. With improved technology in plastics, the potential of being able to produce large waterproof membranes, and the ability to span large distances with a minimum of structural support, the possibilities are intriguing. Tents have always been synonymous with people on the move and the necessity for a structure to be quickly and simply erected and dismantled. The "Big Top" is probably the best known example. These "tensile" structures have been with us from early history. They are called tensile structures because the exterior skin is in tension.

In the case of a tennis bubble, increased air pressure supports the impervious skin just like inflating a balloon. The buildings at the Munich Olympic Games basically were a series of steel cables in tension, like a net or a cobweb, hung, stretched and suspended. The main stadium at the last Olympics in Montreal was designed to have a retractable canopy covering the whole stadium, however, the roof was not completed for the Games.

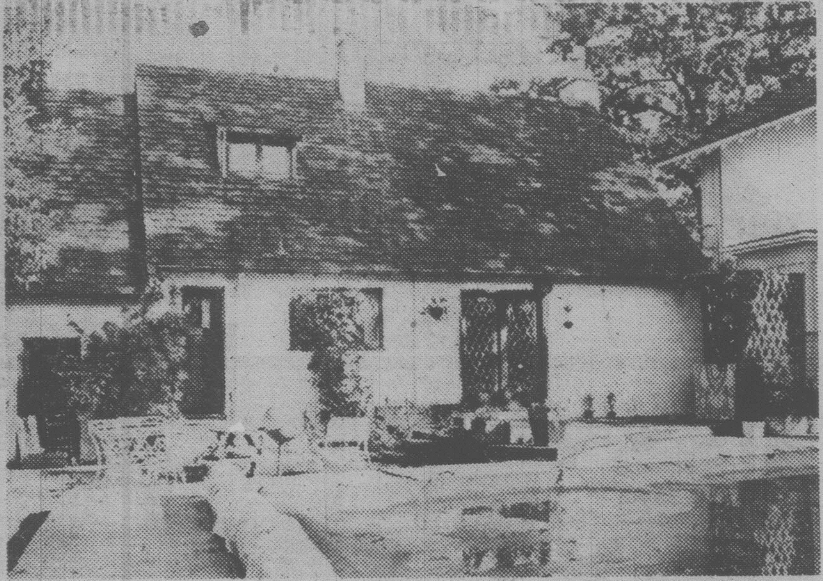
1200 ST. DAVID STREET is the three bedroom home of Barney and Helen Simmons, who have owned the independent theatre on Quadra Street for thirteen years.



SUNNY BACK GARDEN features a large pool, covered now to keep out autumn leaves. To the right can be seen the booth like arrangement which is used during the Feast of Tabernacles.

"WONDER WHO LIVES THERE ?"

Helen and Barney Simmons, owners of the Quadra Theatre live here in Oak Bay

The house was built in the fifties, though its gabled roofline and leaded glass windows are definately Tudor revival. It nestles comfortably under the oak trees on quiet St. David Street, and doesn't look as though it would have a large swimming pool, which takes up almost the entire back yard.

This is a house that's as un-pretentious as it could be, where people and their needs are the most important consideration. Several antique pieces, such as a cloisonne lamp in the living room, and some beautiful original paintings brought back from their travels to London and to Israel draw your eye as you relax in the warmth of the Simmons hospitality.

Out in the west-facing back garden which catches all the autumn sun, the Simmons have built a booth, or sukkot, which is used in the Jewish Feast of Tabernacles. This is a festival of thanksgiving which originally celebrated the end of the harvest season, in which myrtle and willow branches were used in parades of celebration, and are still used in the festivities today. The sukkot is used as a reminder of the huts in which their ancestors lived during their wanderings in the wilderness.

The house has three bedrooms upstairs, and one on the main floor. Helen and Barney have opened up attic space to make a most charming bedroom. The long, slope-ceilinged room which resulted has become a private sitting/reading/sewing space as well as a sleeping area. Helen papered it in a rather large blue and gold stylized floral, with curtains in matching fabric, then used a pale shade of the same blue for the other walls.

Getting honest appraisals from dealers

By JOHN HEARN

Here comes our perennial question, this time from G.W.B. of Vancouver.

"Could you tell me how I can get an honest appraisal from an antique shop?

Two examples: I sold an old silver ring to a dealer who told me he could only get $10-$15 for it. He offered me $10 which I accepted and a week later, there was my ring in the window tagged at $75.

Then I swapped an old desk at a store which gave me a $50 credit which I could spend in the same shop. Next thing I knew they were offering my desk for $125. It seems to me that it would be more responsible if these people would be honest with their customers yet in my travels I have only found a couple of dealers, usually higher priced ones, that were honest."

I feel sure that any dealers reading the above are hopping up and down for the opportunity to reply. I'll try to speak for them and let's remember that this is one man's opinion.

1. A dealer who gives you $10 for a ring and later offers it for $75 is a little sharp maybe but not necessarily dishonest. If the seller had spent a couple of days visiting other stores and researching the market she might well have got $20 but then you are left with the question of how much is a couple of day's shopping around worth?

The dealer, in offering the ring for $75 was probably guided by the knowledge that HIS customers, who also don't like paying any more than they have to, were probably going to bargain him down to a more modest price.

2. That, however, was not the example which G.W.B. gave us. She was offered $10 by a man who said he could not get more than $10-$15 for it but went right ahead and offered it for $75. That dealer was not sharp, he was a liar.

3. A desk sold for $50 and offered for $125 seems to me to be a reasonable mark-up. If he had to pay cash instead of giving a credit he would probably only have offered $40.

What is a reasonable mark-up? Dealers like you to think that they work normally on a margin of about one third. There is a technical term for a dealer like that — bankrupt. He has rent and other overheads, his stock does not turn over that fast and unlike other business people he must pay cash for everything. He may barely survive on a 50% margin but to make a profit he needs two thirds.

My dealer readers may be hopping up and down at that one and could, with complete justification, point to all kinds of transactions on which they were satisfied with one third or less, but that is true only for items which they know they can sell quickly and easily. For items which they must stock for months or even years, a two thirds margin is minimal.

The antique dealing business seems to exercise a fatal attraction for people with a minimum of business experience, a minimum of capital and a marginal knowledge of their products. They are victims of one of the greatest myths of our society, namely that somewhere out there are thousands of collectors with bottomless purses and an insatiable hunger for antiques. Not true.

For every buyer there are a hundred browsers and the serious buyers are frequently far more knowledgeable than the dealers they patronize. It is not at all impossible that one such buyer walked into that Vancouver store, bargained the dealer down from $75 to $50 for that ring, hugging themselves with well concealed glee derived from the knowledge that it was really worth $500. These things happen.

As for G.W.B.'s final point, that only high priced dealers seem to be honest, the point is well taken. They are operating at a completely different level. Their business is not based on people walking in off the street and offering to sell them a ring or a desk.

They buy only from sources where the provenance — that is the authenticated history of the piece is beyond question and they sell only to people who know that authenticity necessarily bears a weighty price tag.

Less chrome, less flash in design theme of Italian furniture fair

By
SUZANNE SLESIN

No matter what the language or accent, the word on the lips of visitors to the 19th Salone del Mobile Italiano here was "tradition." The international furniture fair, which was held in September was a showcase for avant-garde Italian design. This year it offered quieter, more sober fare.

Instead of molded plastic, the architects, designers, manufacturers and buyers at the fair saw acres of wood; instead of chrome tubing, they saw matte black hardware. Chairs looked like chairs, often showing more than a bit of leg. Beds looked as if they could be slept in; tables were meant to be eaten at; lamps were realistically illuminating. Most important, the sofa, once banished to modular mediocrity, returned in triumph as the prima donna of the show.

"There's a desire to get away from the things that used to be status symbols, so that there is less chrome, less flash," said Patricia Hoffman, executive vice president of ICF, the New York furniture distributor. "The trend in Europe is to hide one's wealth, so now expensive furniture is masked in casual material."

After a long period of extravagance, Italian design has taken a definitely traditional tack, offering comfort without losing its sense of wit. "Furniture must be castigato, that is sober, simple, chaste," said Aurelio Zanotta, president of the company that bears his name. "It is Anglo-Saxon taste, but redesigned in the Italian style."

"The opposite of frivolous," added the architect Eleonore Peduzzi Riva. "It's a way of getting back to basics."

Zanotta's little square sofas, by the architects Jonathan De Pas, Paolo Lomazzi and Donato D'Urbino, were attention-getters. Slipcovered in jaunty fabrics from Fiorucci, the trend-setting fashion chain, their covers were meant to be changed as one might change a T-shirt.

"Because of the economic situation, people are hiding behind classical images," said De Pas, mentioning what many Italian manufacturers and designers refer to in slightly hushed tones as "the crisis," the period a few years ago when Italian furniture production was foundering in uneconomical excesses. "This is a perfect classic sofa," he continued. "One has always seen it, it's exactly what people want now."

"Deeply unoriginal," commented Terence Conran, the British designer and home furnishing entrepreneur. "But they are comfortable," he admitted, as he collapsed wearily in one.

"The new designs are supposed to be acceptable and serviceable," said Giotto Stoppino, whose chairs have long been associated with understated elegance. "It is traditional," he said of his new Sax chair for Acerbis. "It's made of wood and it's comfortable, but it is modern in design and finish."

Pieces that at first glance looked conventional often afforded new design details: the one-arm chaise, the horizontal arm pillow, the very noticeable legs peeking out under chairs and couches, reversible covers, crumpled upholstery, white wood and quilted white cotton covers.

"We want furniture to be soft and informal," agreed Paolo Nava, who, with his partner, Antonio Citterio, designed two collections of seating this year. One juxtaposes leather or fabric upholstery with a supporting leather back and modular metal frames. Charles Eames and Eileen Gray come to mind, yet its emphatically crumpled surfaces and casual attitude made this seating one of the most innovative designs shown.

But it was the old-fashioned designs that really set the scene. Poltrona Frau's absolutely classic Chesterfield sofa was covered in kid-glove white leather. Adalberto Dal Lago's fern-patterned and skirted armchairs and couches could have come straight from the morning room of a very British aunt. Marco Fantoni's collection of angular seating for Tecno was covered in an oh-so-gentlemanly tweed. And, at the Cassina showroom, the cantilevered sofas by Paolo Deganello with overscaled geometric prints were reminiscent of the 1950's.

The Cassina showroom, a majestic all-white domed space on Via Durini, designed by Vico Magistretti, drew many visitors and differing reactions. To some it resembled a space ship; to others, it had the hushed atmosphere of a cathedral. By contrast, Maddalena De Padova's showroom on Corso Venezia offered a bucolic oasis. Mrs. De Padova, agent for Herman Miller and Interwall, and prominent in design circles here, filled her showroom with parasols and London park benches.

Looking after a piano: its cabinet, keys, and climate

NEW YORK — With a dash of mohagany and a sprinkle of strings, Henry Engelhard Steinway cooked up the modern piano in his steamy German kitchen 143 years ago. Reminded of these moist beginnings, Mr. Steinway's great-grandsons, who now build pianos in a climate-controlled warehouse in Long Island City, N.Y., agreed that the kitchen was no place to build or to keep a piano. But since it was his first piano, the inventive cabinetmaker may be excused for subjecting it to climatic extremes, which will ultimately destroy the delicate instruments.

Even now, millions of pianos later, a veil of confusion hovers over the proper care of a piano. Should milk be used to wash the ivory keys? Do moths really chew the felt? Can the cabinet be waxed? Should Beethoven's bust be banned from its place of honor on the lid? The experts were consulted on these and other maintenance questions, and following are their answers.

CLIMATE

"Pianos should never be exposed to extremes of climate," said Henry Z. Steinway, chairman of Steinway & Sons. "It's critical that a piano be kept in a place with even temperature and humidity," added his brother, John, the senior vice president of the concern. Ideally, the brothers said, relative humidity should be kept between 45 and 50 percent and the temperature should be maintained at 72 to 75 degrees Fahrenheit.

Even temperature is important because all parts of the piano — wood, cast iron and steel — shrink and expand at different rates, causing stress on all 12,000 of the piano's pieces. Moisture causes the metals to rust and the wood to swell. Air conditioners, routinely turned on and off in summer, and arid heat in winter will "ultimately cause the piano to die of pneumonia," said John Steinway.

Repeated swellings and shrinkings cause the pin block, which holds over 200 strings under 22,000 pounds of pressure, to warp and crack. Replacing the pin block may cost more than $1,000. And if the spruce sounding board, which repeats the strings' vibrations and vastly amplifies their sound, and its supporting ribs warp and separate, the repair bill "would be very substantial," according to Steinway's service department, which no longer has time for such major repairs.

Humidistats and thermometers are recommended, but in general, if people are comfortable, pianos are too. "Damp chasers," small heating elements used to dry out piano interiors, get mixed reviews from the pianists, but many still use the devices, which cost about $15 at most piano dealers.

BEST LOCATION

"People may look at you as if you've grown an extra head, but never let anyone put your piano near open windows, air conditioners or heaters," said Andre Watts, the concert pianist who has played in Lincoln Center's "Great Performer" series for 11 years. The piano should be placed near an interior wall, or a well-insulated exterior wall, he said.

THE CABINET

"I've had some horrendous experiences with over-ambitious cleaning people," said Charles Wadsworth, artistic director and pianist with the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center. "No wax or polish of any kind should be used on the cabinet or near the keys," he said, and the Steinways agreed. If a piano's cabinet has dulled or its lacquer has cracked from too much exposure to sunlight, wax can be used. "But it should be a pure paste floor wax or something intended for fine furniture — nothing compounded or in spray cans, because these ingredients eat the lacquer and do nasty things to the finish," said John Steinway.

THE KEYS

Despite the folklore about using milk or constantly covering the keys to keep the ivory on older pianos white, nothing will stop the natural yellowing process except direct sunlight, which was how the ivory was originally bleached, according to John Steinway. But since copious amounts of direct sunlight will ruin a piano's finish, it's not recommended. Keys made out of synthetic materials should be cleaned only with a cheesecloth dampened slightly with water or a mixture of water and ammonia, for stains.

A REALTOR SPEAKS

How to make your home sell faster and for more

If you are one of the thousands of Canadians trying to sell their homes, like everyone else you want to complete the sales as rapidly as possible and at the same time obtain a top dollar. While your real estate salesperson plays a prime role in selling your home, you too can help by applying some common sense thinking, states A. E. LePage Coast to Coast Real Estate Service, Canada's largest real estate organization.

The most important point of all when selling your house is to put yourself in a buyer's position. Try to see to it that everything about the house would meet with your approval if the roles were reversed. Looking at your home from a prospective buyer's perspective may help you identify items needing your attention that you may have otherwise overlooked.

Try to remember the first time you saw your home before you bought it. Remember which features caught your eye and which didn't. Highlight those features you liked and try to correct those you didn't.

First impressions are lasting. For this reason, it is wise to maintain your home as if friends were coming to visit. Real estate salespeople generally agree that a major help is to make those minor repairs you've long put off — stuck doors, loose door knobs, drippy taps, cracked windows, squeaking hinges, noisy vent fans, burnt-out light bulbs, faulty light switches, counter-top scratches and doorbells that don't work.

Minor repairs take minutes, but they can pay big dividends. Just a few small problems can cause you embarrassment and give a prospective buyer the subtle impression that there may be worse difficulties that are not as evident.

Your home should be tour-clean from morning to night. Often there is little time between the salesperson's call and is arrival with prospective buyers. That means beds must be made, dishes done or hidden out of sight in a dishwasher, newspapers and magazines picked up off the floor, ashtrays cleaned, front steps and stairways uncluttered.

In the summer, keep your lawns trimmed and edged and flower beds cultivated. In winter, remove snow and ice from sidewalks and porches.

Be sure that all windows are sparkling. Open all drapes because a bright home invites inspection. You may want to clean some interior walls and floors. If you decide to repaint or repaper, use neutral colors. A new owner can live with a neutral color temporarily, until he or she decides to repaint in their favorite color.

Because the kitchen is one of the most important rooms, a sparkling kitchen can be an excellent selling point. Neat, orderly rooms also look larger. Remove extra pieces of furniture so visitors can get the full view of a room or hallway and visualize how their furniture will look in it. Put your closets in order. Removing some of the clothing will make them appear larger. And to display the maximum storage space you have in your basement or attic, remove all unnecessary articles.

Turn on certain lights before the salesperson arrives with a prospective buyer so added warmness is provided. Turn off the television and stereo. Dogs and other pets should be controlled and, if possible, kept out of the house. If a prospect does not like animals, he might change his opinion of the cleanliness of your home.

If you have a fireplace and it's winter, a good fire can be a bonus in bringing out that natural "lived-in" feeling. Also in the winter you can place photographs taken of your home in the summer where potential buyers can see them as they tour the house.

Real estate salespeople advise you not to accompany the prospect during an inspection tour. Too often, owners make buyers feel like intruders and the prospect subsequently hurries through the house. Statistics show that most homes are sold when the owner is not present during the showing. The salesperson knows what the buyer wants and is qualified to emphasize the features of your home.

If you must stay during the inspection, be courteous but do not force conversation with prospects. They are not there to pay a social visit. Let the salesperson answer any questions that are raised. Try to avoid discussions of price or terms. Through experience and training, the salesperson is better equipped to bring negotiations to a quick and favorable conclusion.

When you set an asking price, remember that it's exactly that — an asking price. Very seldom does anyone pay the full asking price for a resale home. Real estate salespeople agree that pricing is where most errors are made by homeowners. There's a tendency by every homeowner to have an inflated opinion of the value of his home. But setting an asking price too high leaves the house on the market too long — so long that other salespeople and their clients begin to believe there must be something wrong with the house or it would have sold.

HOMESCENE

CARLO CENCIARINI cutting cedar shakes for his fence. It took him all summer to cover the whole outside of his house at 163 Wellington, where he has been living for seven years with his wife Cindy. First, he covered the old siding with plywood, then a layer of tarpaper, then put on the cedar shakes, which he says keep out the heat in summer, and keep heat in during the winter. The logs for the shakes were "found objects", so the shake fence, he figures, cost him about a dollar. Carlo hails from Florence, Italy.

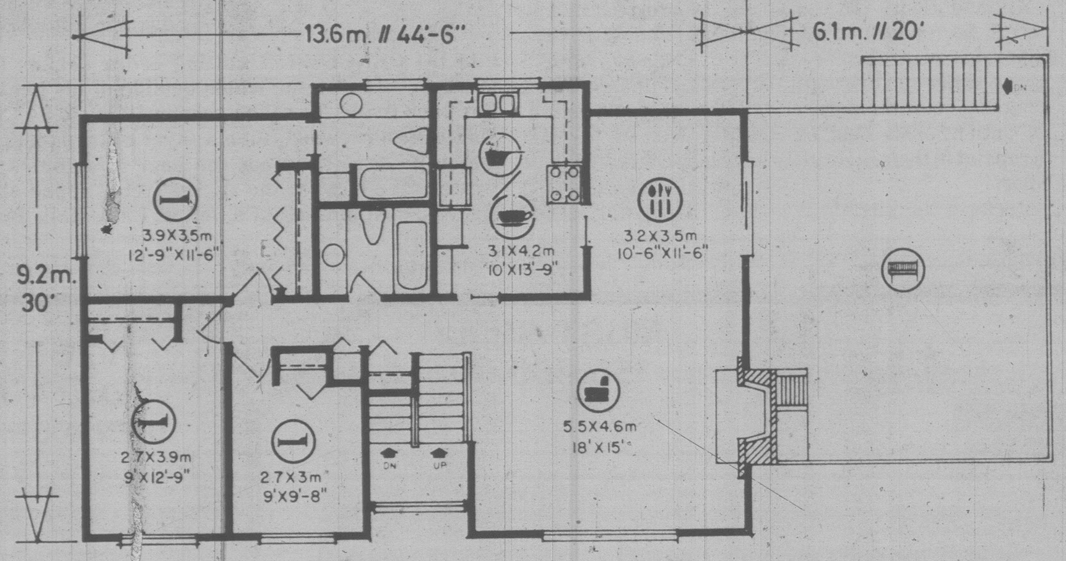
PLAN OF THE WEEK



This practical and high-style three bedroom design provides abundant developed space for the medium-size family and enables the future development of additional bedrooms or recreational facilities on the unfinished lower level.

It is ideally suited to the wide frontage residential building lot, but would accommodate to a more narrow lot were the carport omitted. The solid comtemporary exterior, finished in vertical channel siding, brick veneer and chimney, and with heavy shake roof, presents an eye-catching facade which would complement any residential development.

The weather-protected entry leads into a compact reception foyer, which faces the twin stairways; the left to the lower, unfinished level, and the right up to the main living level.

The main landing opens directly into the large L-shape living-dining room combination, which features a cantilevered-hearth masonry fireplace with built-in barbeque feature on the balcony side. Access to the balcony is via sliding doors from the dining room, for convenient outdoor dining in fine weather.

The well-planned U-shape kitchen has an excellent work triangle configuration, abundant cupboard storage and generous contertop work surfaces. The kitchen may be completely isolated via convenient pocket doors for privacy and hygiene.

All three bedrooms are positioned well away from the main entertaining area for freedom from disturbance. Each has good exposure fo excellent natural light and view, and each has generous closet storage.

The large master has a three-piece ensuite with tub.

The unfinished lower level has a roughed-in fireplace and a roughed-in three-piece bathroom as a basis for the future developemt of additional bedrooms and recreation room combination, when required.

Plans for design No. 79-1270 may be purchased either by the single set, at a cost of $85.00 for the first set and $14.00 for each additional set, or by the package. A five-set plan package, including the first set, is economically priced at $120.00 and an eight-set plan package, also including the first set, is only $150.00.

INTERIOR DESIGN

Use sequence governs appliance placement in today's kitchen

By PAULINE GRAVES

Steps can be saved and confusion kept to a minimum when a kitchen is organized. The success of a factory or of an office depends upon good organization, and the principles used there apply to running a house as well. Work areas are placed to save steps between one and another, and are placed so as to cut down travel time from one stage to the next.

Consider the assembly line technique where one step in production goes to the next in sequence. Why not, then, think of the refrigerator, the sink and the stove in sequence.

Shown here is just such an efficient kitchen with the three major elements mentioned above placed quite close together. But it does not look like a factory or a clinical kitchen.

Instead, the interior design, by Mervyn Barnett, has an old world charm due to the wood panelling given an antiqued finish, the beams and wood ceiling. Panelling also covers the appliance fronts so that they blend in with the overall kitchen decor, and do not stand out, separate from the backgrounds.

Aside from the major basics, the rest of the kitchen pays attention to work planning. For instance, the narrow shelves between two upright posts keep spices and condiments handy to the work counter. They also divide the island counter into two sections, one for meal preparation, the other, which has a small sink, for salad making.

Having two sinks is a real boon, as one sink is always free for washing food, while the other is being used for keeping up with the dishes as you go along.

A 15-inch extension of laminated wood is a chopping block, handy too, for a quick snack.

NOW YOU KNOW

Floors that bounce and laundry tubs that leak

By
GEORGE DALGLEISH

Q. We just moved into a new house and found that the floors bounce quite a bit when we walk across them. As a matter of fact it is so bad that some ornaments that I have on shelving next to the wall actually fall over when my children romp across the floor. Is there any way we can rectify this?

A. Unfortunately the minimum standards that are set forth by our National Building Code are really just that, minimum standards, not ideal.

The contractor that built your house built to minimum standards since this is all that's required. This is something that should be checked before you buy a house, however, that doesn't help you now.

You can reinforce the floor joists by nailing new pieces of 2x6's, 2x8's or 2x10's to the existing floor joists. They don't have to be the complete length of the floor joists in order to be effective, but they do have to be tight against the bottom of the floor. This may mean that you have to remove either bridging or electrical wires in order to install the new joists.

Install them as long as possible and nail them to the existing joists. They could also be bolted to the existing joists but the holes for the bolts must be drilled above the centre line of the new supporting joists. Start in the centre and install the new joists to the existing ones and work out until the bounce is eliminated. In some cases every second joist may be all that is necessary to be strengthened.

In other cases you may have to strengthen every joist. It can be a lot of work but once you have a solid floor you will appreciate it. If it is possible to put in a full length supporting joist so much the better. Rest one end of the joist on the centre beam and the other end could be held in place by either nailing or bolting a piece of 2x4 to the existing concrete wall for the other end of the new supporting joist to sit on.

Q. We have cement laundry tubs and they have recently developed hairline cracks. Although there is not much water leaking through the cracks there is enough to cause a dribble on the floor. How can I repair them?

A. First of all clean the inside of the tubs well with a good cleaner. Quite likely Trisodium Phosphate crystals sprinkled on to the wet surface and then scrubbed off would do the best cleaning job. Then rinse the surface and let the tubs dry completely. The easiest way of repairingthe cracks would be to use a silicone rubber sealing compound available in caulking tubes from building supply stores. Apply a small bead of sealant over the crack and rub it well into the crack. Let it dry and then apply another bead over it, flattening it out with a moist finger. This should solve the problem. If it doesn't there is not much more you can do except buy a new set of tubs.

Q. We have just installed some beautiful matched resilient rosewood to our livingroom wall. The man that installed it said to varnish it and the man in the paint store said to apply a liquid plastic to the surface. What should we do?

A. Neither. The best finish for rosewood is an oil finish. Varnish and liquid plastic will eventually cause problems especially if there is light shining on the panels. An oil finish can be rejuvenated on a regular basis and keeps the panels from cracking and drying. An oil such as Watco clear oil would be the best finish for a rosewood panel.

Obviously the material was quite expensive and so you don't want to goof it now. With oil you can't. Simply brush the oil on to the surface and keep it wet for about a half hour. Then let the oil soak in over night and apply another coat the next day. After that has soaked in then use wet and dry sandpaper dipped in oil and sand the entire surface. This will sand off any of the grain that has swelled up and rub the sanded material back into the surface.

Finish with a coat of oil and then let dry over night. Use a lint-free cloth to polish the surface. If you like a high gloss just polish it until you obtain the gloss you want. The more you polish the higher the gloss. Whenever you want to rejuvenate the wall or clean it, just use a clean lint-free rag dipped in the clear oil. Apply it to the surface and then wipe it down with a dry cloth. It's that simple, that easy.

Q. We used a caulking compound to seal the aluminum windows to the frames in our house. That was only a year ago and now we find that the caulking compound is drying out and cracking, causing it to be ineffective. Did we use the wrong material? What should be used?

A. One of the best materials to use for sealing a window is a one part urethane sealant. These urethane sealing compounds are basically used for commercial construction, although they can be obtained from construction specialty wholesalers. Your local building supply dealer may be able to obtain some for you. However, if that is not readily available in your area, the next best product would be a silicone sealing compound such as General Electric's silicone sealant. First before you install the new sealing compound you must remove all of the existing caulking compound, which may mean the removal of the existing aluminum storm windows. If you must remove the aluminum storm windows then install a bead of the sealant before you put the windows back on. Then where the sealant squashes out on the edge of the window just use a damp finger to smooth the surface. Any additional sealing compound that may be drying on to the surface of the window or wall can be removed with a razor blade scraper and a proper holder. do not use solvents or other liquids to soften the silicone sealer or the one part Urethane sealer in order to remove it. This just creates a big gooey mess.

What you should do in the garden now

There are many chores for gardeners at this time of year: some plants will have to be dug up and moved inside before the frost comes, while others will have to be mulched. (Begonias will bloom inside this winter, if taken in now and cut back)

Let fall-flowering bulbs dry in a shady, airy place, then cut off dried top growth and store bulbs in a box of dry sand.

Now's the time to spade your vegetable garden . . . don't wait until spring.

Mulch your perennial border, after frost is on ground, with a loose mulch of hay or straw, holding it in place with branches of chicken wire.

This is the time to plant bulbs for spring blooming, allowing three weeks growing time for the roots before the ground freezes solid.

Now's the time to plant evergreens and to prepare your lawn for winter and next spring. Remove leaves and other debris to discourage fungus and other diseases.

APARTMENT LIVING

The key to furnishing the smaller home is finding furniture and accessories designed for more than one use, and which is on a smaller scale than one would choose for a large house.

Modular furniture has a sleek, streamlined look and can be moved into a variety of seating arrangements — a great advantage when you entertain.

Tall bookcases and etageres provide attractive storage for books, knickknacks, stereos and televisions. Inexpensive plastic Parsons tables (the ones with the legs right on the corners) make good coffee and end tables.

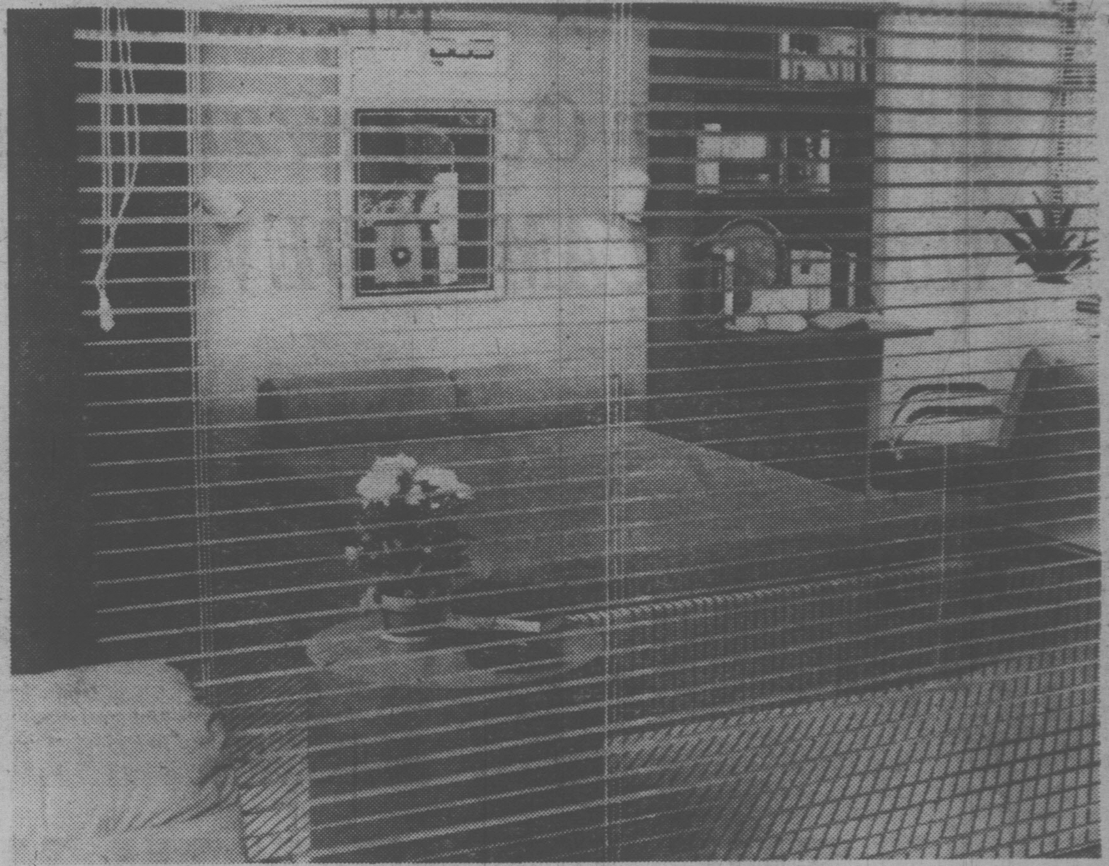
For the sleeping area, a platform bed is a practical choice because it can serve as extra seating space.

To create the feeling of space without being boring,paint or wallpaper different walls in different but related colors, say several hues of the same basic shade.

What you try to avoid is one room blue, one pink, one orange, etc. This chops up the space too much.

Lighting is important to optically enlarge a small apartment. Wall fixtures and hanging lamps leave floor and table space free while providing ample illumination. Window shades or shutters give a more open appearance to rooms than do floor-length draperies. Foliage at windows also contributes to a fresh and spacious look.

One-room living can be just as comfortable as that in a large home. All it takes is careful planning.



HERE'S WHAT one inventive apartment dweller in New York did. She used a venetian blind as a room divider to separate the sleeping area of her bedroom from the sewing area. Because the blind is so thin, it takes up little floor space, can be closed for complete visual privacy, opened during the daytime for a feeling of space. You can use this idea to create an entry hall in a walk-in living room. Wicker blinds that can be rolled up will work in the same way to divide a room. Hang them from ceiling hooks.
